DR. EUGENE S. FARLEY — Assembly Address to Students — 1965

THE CONQUEST OF INNER SPACE

Last year as I welcomed you back to College I remarked that it was increasingly difficult to find words which would be of significance to you. This difficulty increases each year. It increases not because our problems are less acute and our opportunities fewer, but because our problems and our opportunities continue to increase in number and complexity. For two decades we have known that we could destroy our civilization in a holocaust of hydrogen bombs. Now we are advised that man can create living matter and can direct, or can at least influence, our biological inheritance. Man has indeed gained great powers but there is little evidence that he knows what to do with these newly-acquired powers.

In the midst of such drastic developments I trust you will forgive me for not offering final answers to you. I would be blind were I to offer final answers to the unknown future which suggests possibilities for good and bad far beyond the comprehension of our minds.

The nature of our dilemma is revealed by a single broadcast which reported the flight of Gemini V, the Los Angeles riots, and Viet Nam. In discussing the flight of Gemini V the commentator traced the scientific and technical developments that had made it possible. He listed the findings we hoped to obtain from this eight-day flight. In the same broadcast he spoke of the riots in Los Angeles and suggested several causes of this tragic situation. He reported also the fighting in Viet Nam but gave little attention to the basic causes of this conflict.

This single broadcast seemed to me to reveal the problems and dilemmas of our time. The flight of Gemini V gives evidence of man's ability to release and control physical powers. The riots in Los Angeles and the fighting in Viet Nam pinpoint our failure to control ourselves and to answer questions that must be answered if man's relations to man are to be improved.

Do not these three events demonstrate that the survival of our civilization requires better understanding between men? Do they not indicate that unless man's relations to man are improved, the physical powers released by scientists and harnessed by technologists, promise disaster. Although we may exult because of our success in probing outer space, we must recognize that the conquest of outer space will lead to tragedy unless we are equally successful in probing inner space . . . the recesses of man's heart and mind.

You and your College are involved in this modern dilemma. Some of our faculty and students are involved in research which relates to man's probes of outer space. The knowledge that they gain will add to our knowledge of the universe in which we live and will lead to further ventures into the unknown. They will advance man's frontiers of knowledge but will they also release and give needed direction to man's intellectual and spiritual powers?

It sometimes seems that we exclude man from our thoughts as we search for greater knowledge of the physical world. I would not suggest that we reduce our quest for knowledge of the universe, for further knowledge is needed if life is to improve on our crowded planet. I would suggest that our studies of the universe be matched in scope and intensity by our studies of man and of man's relation to man. It is in this study of man that we hope that your college experience will be of particular benefit. We hope that you will gain understanding of your neighbor, of his desires and his concerns. We then hope that you will assume ever-increasing responsibility for the development of our social, political, and economic institutions so that with the passing of generations these institutions will serve man more effectively.

At Wilkes we are fundamentally concerned with you and with your conquest of inner space. We know that it is only you who can translate knowledge into wisdom and wisdom into constructive action. We are all too painfully aware that we cannot give you wisdom, nor understanding, nor awareness. All we can do is offer you new opportunities for self-development and open to you new vistas of understanding. We will offer you knowledge; we will encourage and stimulate creative thinking; we will hold before you some worthwhile standards, but in the final analysis these are merely the beginnings of an education and only you can go beyond the starting point to which we bring you. If our work is successful, new vistas will be opened to you, and every gain of yours will lead to a greater awareness of your need for enlarged understanding and of your potential for greater achievement.

Ordinarily, colleges and universities have concluded that their responsibility ends when they offer intellectual stimulation to their students. With this point of view I am in complete disagreement. All of us should be aware by this time that intellect is but one aspect of man's life and that the neglect of either the physical or spiritual aspects creates an unbalanced condition which is disturbing to the individual and detrimental to the society of which he is a member.

Just last week the inadequacy of isolated intellectualism was revealed as I talked to a brilliant student from one of the finest of the Eastern colleges. After two years of study he dropped out of college because he was dissatisfied with the education he was receiving. As I talked to him I found that he had only one concept of morality. He believed that failure to preserve human life was the only immorality that should concern us. He failed to recognize that our whole society is based upon moral concepts which are designed to establish confidence among men. In his desire to understand the dilemma of our time he concentrates almost exclusively upon the faults of men and of the society which they have created. He is a critic who assumes no responsibility for constructive action. His is a fine mind, centering all of its thought upon the ills and injustices of our society with little or no thought to the strengths of this society. Were he to devote his energies to the improvement of this society he might assist in the correction of these ills. Instead, he has become a critic, not a creator. In my opinion, he is a part of the problem of our time and offers no promise. He rebels against faulty conditions but does not even attempt to rectify them. I am impressed by his concern; but I am disturbed by the nature of his rebellion.

It sometimes appears that rebellion against inequities is confined to the young intellectual who is concerned with the existing injustices that he discovers as he moves toward maturity. If I were hopeful that their rebellion would be constructive, I would be happy to rebel with them. I respect their dissatisfaction with undesirable conditions, but I fear their quest for simple answers to human problems. During a not-too-short life span, I have seen proposal after proposal submitted as the final answer to all human problems, and then I have seen the demonstrated inadequacy of these proposals as they were changed from ideas to working processes.

Because of this experience I have come back to an old-fashioned point of view. I do not believe that we will accomplish the great reforms that are needed unless we first reform ourselves. Although greater intelligence and greater knowledge are essential to the resolution of the problems that now surround us and confront us, intellect and intelligence by themselves are inadequate. Intelligence, unless it is associated with responsibility, can destroy the free institutions that we have enjoyed and can replace them with totalitarian controls. This possibility has been presented by two well-known writers—Aldous Huxley and George Orwell. In their novels "Brave New World" and "1984," they expressed the conviction that man is creating an economic and social machine in which the individual will be a mere automaton, slowly sacrificing the freedoms that are essential to his increased significance as a human being. I hope that you and I, and all of us at Wilkes, will oppose this automatization of human beings so that we may secure the freedom of the individual spirit. It is my hope that our faculty may work with you in developing those inner resources upon which your future and the future of mankind must rely.

Although I have suggested the need for greater intelligence and knowledge, I have not stressed the importance of understanding—understanding of man and of his environment. I now wish to emphasize that full understanding is unattainable unless we are first aware of the nature and character of all the problems and all the desires of man. Knowledge, without this awareness, is barren whereas knowledge that is activated and directed by awareness must inevitably lead to a greater understanding of man's dilemma.

In spite of the forebodings of Huxley and Orwell, there is today an increasing demand among the peoples of the world for more freedom. Unfortunately, there is little evidence that those who demand greater freedom are aware of their responsibility for creating conditions that are essential to freedom. Many who aspire to freedom are all too ready to destroy the moral foundations and the sense of personal responsibility upon which freedom is based. They envision a new world but are blind to the painstaking efforts that are essential to the creation of this new world. They see what they want but they do not see what they must do to obtain what they want. They wish to obtain today that which can be produced only by years of dedicated effort and planning. They forget or fail to recognize that human progress has come through centuries of hard experience, trial and error, and dedicated service. Over the centuries a combination of high ideals, hard work, and applied intelligence have made possible the economic, political, and social gains of the past centuries. Unless in our time we recognize the many painstaking steps that must be taken if we are to attain the desired goals, it is unlikely that the future will be more promising than the present.

As I speak of the painstaking nature of progress, I am reminded of the personal contempt that was expressed by some of the dreamers who were first associated with this College. Whereas I always groped for the next constructive step, they envisioned a great college that would serve the Community in the distant future. They were right in their vision of the future, but while looking far ahead, they were unwilling to take the many painful steps that were necessary to establish a sound foundation. In consequence, they missed the next essential step while envisioning the ultimate goal. They were unwilling to take the thousands of small steps that are required in the building of any sound foundation for future growth. It is my impression that this small and isolated experience demonstrates the nature of progress. A thousand little things must be done before any great advance is possible.

Because I believe that there are few shortcuts to human progress, I am going to advocate to you the development of certain old-fashioned virtues. These are all concerned with the development of your inner resources so that you may become a more significant and constructive person in the years ahead.

The first thing that I wish to emphasize with you, apart from enlightenment, greater vision, greater awareness, and a greater understanding, is a sense of responsibility. You are a part of society. You can be a constructive member of society; you can be completely neutral; or you can be a part of the problem of society. Only you can determine which you will be.

Some of you in your study of psychology have learned of determinism and have concluded that what you are and what you will be is predetermined by your experience and by the influences which surround you. In a great measure this is true, but also, in some measure, you can determine what these influences will be. You can select the type of influence with which you associate yourself, and you can sometimes determine the nature of the influence that you derive from each experience. Over the years I have been tremendously impressed by the different reactions of men and women to similar experiences. Their reactions have been different because their viewpoints were different, as were their aspirations. Because of these differences, some look upon an experience as an opportunity, whereas others look upon the same experience as an obstacle. Because these differing personal responses are inevitable, it is important that we cultivate within ourselves those points of view that will enable us to see the best and then to choose the action that is most constructive. The attitude with which we approach these experiences may determine whether or not we are defeated or are challenged by them.

Earlier I mentioned to you that man's relation to man was the most significant problem now confronting us. Unless we can nurture greater trust and confidence in one another, the incessant conflicts that now disturb our nation and the world will continue to jeopardize our civilization. Whereas we have given great attention to the discovery of scientific laws, we have given relatively little attention to the laws that govern human relations. In my fumbling way I have concluded that there is one law that governs human relations. It is: "Like begets like." By this I mean that if I respect other people, they are likely to respect me. If I trust other people, they are likely to trust me. If I am dishonest with other people, they are likely to be dishonest with me. If I have contempt for other people, they are likely to have contempt for me. Is there not some sense in this suggested law of human relations?

I am not suggesting that you be naive in your effort to establish good relations with others for I recognize that such responses are not automatically obtained. All too frequently, people have found it unwise to trust people. With such persons, time, experience and personal confidence are needed before they dare to trust others. Because painstaking efforts are required to establish a firm foundation for personal relations, I am returning to certain old-fashioned concepts that all too frequently have been submerged in our quest for material progress.

Perhaps all of the personal qualities that I am suggesting are covered by one word, "integrity." Integrity, of course, involves honesty, loyalty, morality, conviction, and courage. Each of us recognizes that if a person is honest and loyal, we are likely to trust him. Unfortunately, many of us fail to recognize that if we are neither loyal nor honest, there is no reason for others to trust us. We also fail to recognize that each dishonest act of ours not only affects our relations with others. It also affects our character and leads to a deterioration of this character. Such deterioration does not encourage confidence, in us or in others.

In the midst of our rapidly changing world with changing values and changing standards, grave doubts are raised concerning moral standards that have long been accepted. In many instances—and perhaps in all instances—these accepted moral values need to be reexamined for they have been based upon conditions and assumptions that are no longer acceptable.

Morality is, however, the strong base upon which human relations must rest. Sexual lasciviousness and promiscuity do not make a solid foundation for a happy marriage, nor do they provide a good background for the rearing of children. All too many of our problems arise today from the lack of moral responsibility.

When I speak of morals, however, I am not referring to the rigid morality of the Puritans but, on the other hand, I cannot accept the concept that the only immorality is the destruction of human life. In my own mind the nature of our morality must be decided by its effect upon us, by its effect upon others and by its effect upon our relations with others. If we are to accept this concept of morality, each of us must evaluate his acts and determine by his own standards that which he considers to be constructive.

Of course such an evaluation requires a broad knowledge of many standards if the best standards are to be selected. In making such an evaluation and in our quest for a proper sense of moral responsibility, we will make mistakes; we will grope for the best and as we grope we will move forward and will gain in stature and significance. To accept such a period of groping requires faith—faith that the quest will be productive if pursued vigorously and continuously. It also will require conviction as to what is right and wrong, and it will require moral courage and sometimes even physical courage. It will require you to make decisions that may not be acceptable to the people about you. It will require an independence of conscience that can only be sustained by faith in the values that sustain you.

Everything that I have said comes back to the fact that the great problem that now confronts us is concerned almost exclusively with man's relation to man. We can encourage the development of science and technology, we can improve our material way of living to a point. But with all this material improvement, a decline in our relation with others takes place unless each of us is sustained by his own personal integrity. Such personal integrity is possible only where individuals recognize their own significance, discharge their responsibilities to others, and possess the needed measure of courage and conviction. He who is possessed of these qualities may face the unknown future in the faith that intelligent and responsible action can create a better tomorrow.

All that I have said imposes upon you responsibility for your own education and development. We, who wish to help you, can offer knowledge, we can encourage and stimulate creative thinking, we can establish minimum standards, but ultimately you must decide what you wish to be. Only you can develop the inner resources upon which your future and the future of the race depends.

Our conquest for outer space will be disastrous unless it is matched by a comparable conquest of inner space . . . the inner recesses of your minds and hearts.

by Dr. Bronis Kaslas — Associate Professor of History

WORLD ORDER

In primitive societies, execution of law and justice was left in the hands of individuals. If, for example, one's brother was killed, he, the injured, went looking for the killer and enforced the law himself.

Order in a society implies a certain legal feature of the society. Indeed, a society is itself a legal order. The Romans knew that "Ubi societas ibi jus" [where there is society, there is law]. There can be no society without law. A legal order is that system of rules evolved out of the institutionalized organization of a society, by and within which the society operates and functions.

There are advocates of stricter order or more liberal order, more government or less government, in human societies. But only the most unrealistic contemplate the Utopia of anarchy, where the perfection of human nature would be such that no rules or controls would be necessary to enable people to live together in peace and harmony.

There are no perfect human beings and there are no perfect nations. As law must govern individuals grouped in national societies, so law must govern nations in their world relationships, if they are to be peaceful, whether those relations continue to be among nations, in the present system of sovereign states, or instead in a world confederation or in one unitary world state. The basic maxim Ubi societas ibi jus is inescapable; it is the very essence of the life of humanity.

This premise is seldom challenged. Differences of opinion are concerned with the concept and nature of the agencies wielding the law and methods of law enforcement. There is general consensus that every society must have law and that international society must also have law.

Humanity is grouped into various nations, most of which are today political entities known as states. They are all more or less perfect "legal orders," the degree of legal perfection of the national state depending on the techniques and processes regulating the use of force in that society.

When societies developed into "legal orders" known as states, the right to use force against a violator of order and arbitrary enforcement of law were taken out of the hands of the individual and concentrated exclusively in the hands of the society acting through designated agents. Thus, one of the most essential features of the modern state system is its exclusive monopoly of the right to use force. This monopoly makes national states orderly systems where relative or absolute peace prevails, depending on the degree of absolute monopoly and on the cultural standards of the particular society.

The modern state has thus totally abolished the "sovereignty" of individuals which had been a characteristic feature of primitive societies. Concentration of the right to use force in the hands of central government has become the basic prerequisite for domestic peace. The rule of law is elevated above arbitrary personal standards of behavior and codes.

Thus, in a well-organized national state, flagrant wrongs which threaten the established order and the security and safety of the people are deemed to be everybody's business and are considered as crimes or offenses against the society as a whole. The entire community is deemed to be injured by a breach of law, because law is its protection, and if law is violated with impunity, the protection of the people will disappear.

WORLD COMMUNITY OF NATIONS

It has been said that modern technology made one world out of many nations. By making the nations dependent on each other, it created an international community, or an international society. How does the political theory about law and the modern state elaborated above apply, if at all, to this international community of today?

Until very recently, and even now, the sovereignty of the individual members of the international community has been sacred. The political theories of the various kinds of national states, and even the Charter of the United Nations, confirm and protect the sovereignty of the states. A breach of international law has been considered a matter concerning only the state whose rights are directly injured; no other state, nor the community of states, is entitled to remonstrate, object, or take action.

This is far from being a legal order. Rather, it is a concept of a primitive society. And it must be admitted that the world community of nations is today both politically and legally in a primitive condition. It may be questioned whether there is truly such a thing as a world community.

If the world is to become a community or society, the theory of its legal order must change, so that violations of the law of such nature as to threaten the peace and order of the community of nations must be deemed a violation of the rights of every nation, and society must, through its agents, punish the violator.

History shows that the international community of nations has been attempted. But progress is slow. The Covenant of the League of Nations was hailed as an innovation in this respect by declaring "Any war or a threat of war . . . is hereby declared a matter of concern to the whole League." The Briand-Kellogg Pact of 1928 was another step in the same direction. The Inter-American System is making great progress in this area. And the underlying philosophy of the Charter of the United Nations clearly includes the notion of a community interest in matters affecting international peace.

Implicit in the adoption of the principle of community interest, upon which the international society should be based, is a challenge to and virtually the destruction of, traditional and absolute state sovereignty. The development of international government would suggest the ultimate curtailment of individual state sovereignty, with the substitution of some form of joint sovereignty. The official United States proposal for international ownership and control of atomic energy, the "Baruch Plan," demonstrated a radical change by a leading world power (then possessor of a monopoly on atomic energy) toward the concept of sovereignty. Mr. Baruch, the U.S. delegate at the U.N., declared that "the peoples of the democracies are unwilling to be fobbed off by mouthings about narrow sovereignty." But in the same Assembly session, the Soviet representative opposed Baruch's proposal, stating that "the principle of sovereignty is one of the cornerstones on which the United Nations' structure is built; if this were touched, the whole existence and the future of the United Nations would be threatened."

These two divergent views of sovereignty are the basic obstacles to creation of an international government. What are the possibilities of overcoming these obstacles? What are the prospects today for a world order? These questions must be examined in the light of the nuclear age and the radical change in the concept of war itself.

The "old-fashioned" kind of war—the sort of fighting that occurred at Gettysburg, Borodino, Waterloo, the Marne, the Maginot Line, at Stalingrad, Normandy, and even over Hiroshima and Nagasaki,—is drastically outmoded. Today there are stocks of nuclear bombs equal to one hundred million tons of TNT. One such bomb would be equal to 5,000 Hiroshima-type bombs exploding at the same instance. Thoughtful observers have calculated that the nuclear weapons of the four nuclear powers total approximately sixty billion tons of TNT. In other words, the United States, Russia, Britain and France have enough bombs to kill 240 billion people. There is no possibility, however, that the existing nuclear bombs would kill 240 billion people, because the entire population of the earth is only slightly over 3 billion.

All or most past wars were started and fought with a hope of victory. An all-out nuclear war would make Europe, Asia, and America a huge cemetery fenced in by the Oceans. The rest of the world most probably would be annihilated or mutilated by immense clouds of radiation floating around the globe. Thus, there is not hope of military victory in a nuclear war. The nuclear weapons make a premeditated or planned military victory impossible and thus make war inconceivable.

Full realization of implications of the new weapons will force the nations to stabilize their relations toward the goal of an effective international government. This conclusion is based on the lack of alternatives: we either all perish together or all live together. For an ambitious and expansive power, such as Soviet Russia or China, this is a horrible and hopeless position. But they must, willy nilly, reconcile themselves to the idea of peaceful coexistence and cooperation, for there is no other guarantee of any existence.

The old Indian Tale of Four Brothers tells a powerfully tragic story which has implications for 20th century scientific man, with all his skills and achievements. It tells the story of four brothers, each of whom mastered a scientific specialty.

"I have mastered a science," said the first, "which makes it possible for me, if I have nothing but a piece of bone of some creature, to create straightaway the flesh that goes with it."

"I," said the second, "know how to grow that creature's skin and hair, if there is flesh on its bones."

The third said, "I am able to create its limbs if I have the flesh, the skin, and the hair."

"And I," concluded the fourth, "know how to give life to that creature, if its form is complete with limbs."

Thereupon, the four brothers went into the jungle to find a piece of bone, so that they could demonstrate their specialties. As fate would have it, the bone they found was a lion's, but they did not know it and picked it up. One added flesh to the bone, the second grew hide and hair, the third completed it with matching limbs, and the fourth gave the lion life. Shaking, its heavy mane, the ferocious beast arose and turned its menacing mouth, sharp teeth, and merciless claws upon its creators. It killed them all and vanished contentedly into the jungle.

Nuclear age man has created similar tales. One of these presents us with the following future:

"The end of the next World War? The human race is destroyed by atomic bombs. Two aviators remain alive, chasing each other around the earth in jet planes. Over a forest in Africa, propulsive energy exhausted, first one, then the other, crashes at the foot of a high tree in the branches of which sit an aged chimpanzee and his mate. The old ape shrugs his shoulders, turns wearily to his wife, and says, "There you are, Ma; now we have to start it all over again."

CONCLUSIONS

I personally am not a believer in tales, no matter how captivating and realistic they are.

I rather believe in rational man, who began many thousand years ago, perhaps on four legs, destined to be physically one of the weakest and clumsiest creatures on earth. He was endowed, however, with mental capacities which enabled him to learn to walk on two legs, using the other two as hands. His intelligence ultimately enabled him to come out of caves and inhabit cities and villages, enabled him to move faster than any other creature, to compete in flight with the strongest eagles and to exceed the speed of sound.

"Of the four horsemen enumerated in the apocalyptic vision of St. John as the four principal scourges of mankind, PESTILENCE and FAMINE have been curbed by man's medical and agricultural achievements. Even DEATH, the rider on the pale horse, has been constrained to let most men live out their 20,000 days. But WAR, the rider on the red horse, still raises his sword above the nations."

Thus age-old challenge still remains today: the prevention and conquest of war. Success in mastering this tragic challenge depends upon our instinct for survival, our intellectual vitality, and our awareness of the impossibility of any future military victory.

In Memoriam

In the spring of 1936 Eleanor Farley came to Wyoming Valley. Twenty-nine years later she left, - on a bright August day in 1965. The years between saw the most remarkable impact of a personality on the area that the people of the Valley had ever known. Her unpretentious feeling for human relations made everyone her friend. Her joyous spirit lifted everyone's spirit. To the students of the College through all the changing years she was a guardian angel.

That she was a skilled musician was only part of the impact. The sensitivity that made her a musician and a poet made her respond to the problems and pleasures of others in a unique way, free of sentimentality and full of a kind of special joyousness that is still here whenever we think of her, since that August day when she died so suddenly and left so many of us bereft.

To the Alumni to whom she meant so much we give our special thoughts. "Homecoming" will never be as rich without her, but because of her it will have a special memory of things past never to be recaptured except as a recurrent gratitude that "Eleanor Farley was our friend."

The following is a resolution of the Board of Trustees of Wilkes College concerning the death of Eleanor Coates Farley:

On motion duly made, seconded, and carried, it was —

Resolved: Eleanor Coates Farley was more an integral part of Wilkes College than if she had been an Officer.

Since 1936, when she came to Wilkes-Barre with Doctor Farley at the time he assumed the position of President of Bucknell Junior College, she has been a constant inspiration and of great influence in the development and transformation of the Junior College into the Wilkes College of today.

Her encompassing interest in all facets of college life, coupled with an unusual understanding and friendliness have been of tremendous help to her husband and to the College.

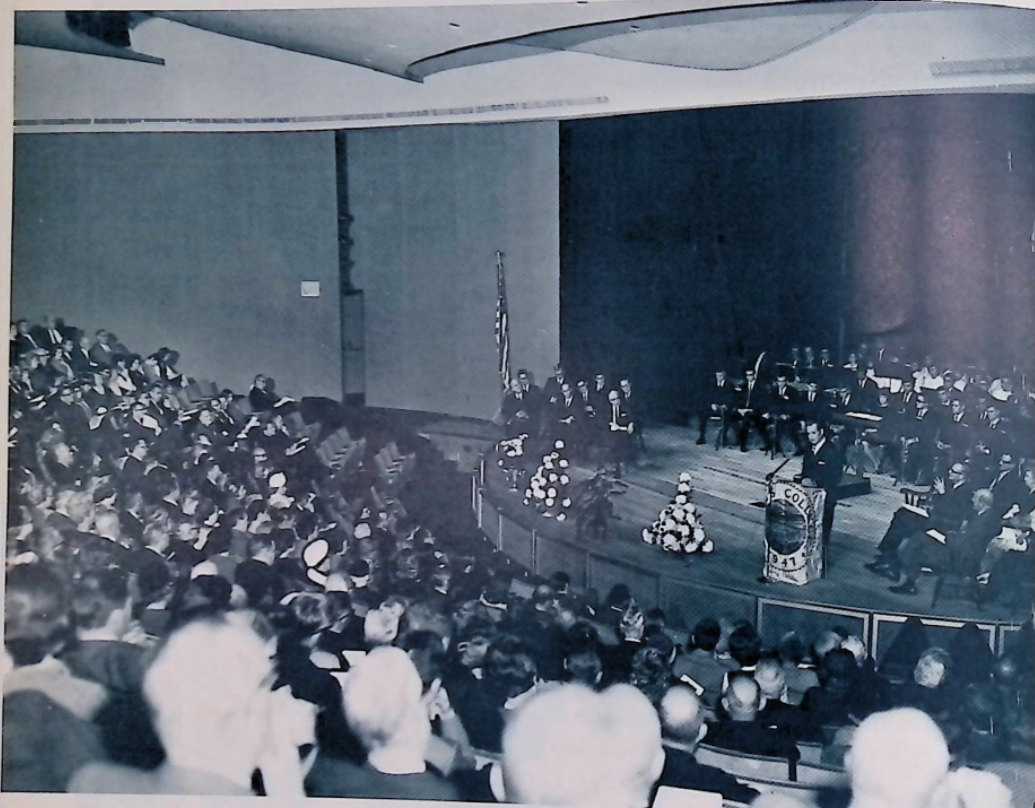

An outstanding musician, stimulating companion, of great heart and boundless courage evidenced by more than fifteen years of living on the very brink of eternity without letting the world know, a thirst for knowledge and of great energy, her contribution and dedication to the College since its conception cannot be overestimated or ever repaid. By reason of her character, personality, ability and activities, she was respected, admired and beloved by all who knew her and leaves behind her a memory that will be forever cherished.

The Board of Trustees of Wilkes College, both as a Board and individually, does hereby record its very deep sorrow and sense of personal loss in the death of Mrs. Farley.

AND BE IT FURTHER —

Resolved: That this Resolution be spread on the minutes of the Board of Trustees and a copy be sent to Doctor Farley.

Center For The Performing Arts Dedicated

A dream of long standing came true for Wilkes College on October 26 when the formal dedication ceremonies for the Center for the Performing Arts were held. A gathering of 500 friends of the College were present for the dedication ceremonies.

Principal address for the dedication of the Arts Center was delivered by Paul Green, Pulitzer-prize winning playwright and member of the department of dramatic arts at the University of North Carolina.

In "Dramatizing Our American Heritage," Green related personal experiences of his earlier writing days, citing stories of struggle, pointing out the need for what struggle exists . . . and the need for it to count for something. Emphasizing the American dream, the human dream, the speaker quoted in verse, "We sing a response, oh dream of pioneer, Lord of the wilderness. The unafraid tamer of darkness, fire and flood of the soaring spirit, winged aloft on the plumes of agony and death. Hear us, oh hear . . . the dream still lives. It lives and shall not die."

Quoting history, Mr. Green said, "It is easy to make a good thing out of a good thing, but to make good out of evil is the real challenge." Here he noted the effort of years ago to make good of slavery; even today we are fighting this battle, especially to make good out of the evil of color discrimination. He commented that in these different places where our heritage is at stake, he found the American people respond to characters of the stage that are trying to go somewhere, trying to do something that counts for something.

Mr. Green commented that the Center for the Performing Arts will grow in strength and creative power and expressed the hope that out of this will grow an idea of creating here in these "quiet hills" a spectacular story of the people who have built the place and made it possible to be dedicated.

The speaker pointed out that we of this area are sitting on the most dramatic material possible, our historical heritage, and urged the story be told. He concluded his address with a verse in reference to the people present and those of yesteryear, ending with "This is a creative place, this is a shrine . . . and out of it may come this creativity. So, thus the dead do live in us again . . . and we the living, honorably may die."

The principal speaker for the dedication was introduced by the chairman of the College Board of Trustees, Attorney Charles B. Waller, who also gave brief welcoming remarks.

In his welcoming remarks, Dr. Eugene Farley emphasized the significance of the Center for the Performing Arts. Dr. Farley cited the Center as a beautiful building, and practical, and one which will enable the College to create a better balance in both curriculum and in extra-curricular activities.

"We hope the availability of this building will encourage our students to develop interests that are independent of their academic work but which will be creative in their influence. We dare to hope that much-needed qualities of the spirit will be nurtured through a program that combines discipline in the sciences, the humanities, and the social studies with creativity in the performing arts. We anticipate that creative effort will cultivate artistic and spiritual resources which will give meaning and direction to our material growth.

INTERIOR OF CENTER FOR THE PERFORMING ARTS

The interior of the 500-seat auditorium of the Center for the Performing Arts is shown in these photographs. The seating is fashioned in a semi-arena, with no seat being farther than 50 feet from the proscenium. Tiers of gold mohair upholstered seats lie beneath three drop ceilings, each a different shade of blue.

The walls of the main auditorium are adorned with a specially textured gold fabric, imprinted with a design modernized by Leigh Allen, renowned designer and decorator. Mr. Allen was responsible for the decor, interior design, and furnishings of the Center.

Evaluated as one of the best-equipped theatres of its kind on any college campus, the Center overlooks the Susquehanna River at South and West River Streets.

Center For The Performing Arts Dedicated

A dream of long standing came true for Wilkes College on October 26 when the formal dedication ceremonies for the Center for the Performing Arts were held. A gathering of 500 friends of the College were present for the dedication ceremonies.

Principal address for the dedication of the Arts Center was delivered by Paul Green, Pulitzer-prize winning playwright and member of the department of dramatic arts at the University of North Carolina.

In "Dramatizing Our American Heritage," Green related personal experiences of his earlier writing days, citing stories of struggle, pointing out the need for what struggle exists . . . and the need for it to count for something. Emphasizing the American dream, the human dream, the speaker quoted in verse, "We sing a response, oh dream of pioneer, Lord of the wilderness. The unafraid tamer of darkness, fire and flood of the soaring spirit, winged aloft on the plumes of agony and death. Hear us, oh hear . . . the dream still lives. It lives and shall not die."

Quoting history, Mr. Green said, "It is easy to make a good thing out of a good thing, but to make good out of evil is the real challenge." Here he noted the effort of years ago to make good of slavery; even today we are fighting this battle, especially to make good out of the evil of color discrimination. He commented that in these different places where our heritage is at stake, he found the American people respond to characters of the stage that are trying to go somewhere, trying to do something that counts for something.

Mr. Green commented that the Center for the Performing Arts will grow in strength and creative power and expressed the hope that out of this will grow an idea of creating here in these "quiet hills" a spectacular story of the people who have built the place and made it possible to be dedicated.

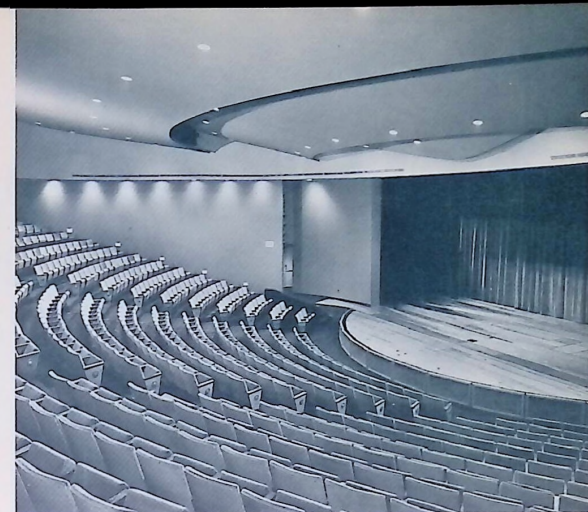

The speaker pointed out that we of this area are sitting on the most dramatic material possible, our historical heritage, and urged the story be told. He concluded his address with a verse in reference to the people present and those of yesteryear, ending with "This is a creative place, this is a shrine . . . and out of it may come this creativity. So, thus the dead do live in us again . . . and we the living, honorably may die."

The principal speaker for the dedication was introduced by the chairman of the College Board of Trustees, Attorney Charles B. Waller, who also gave brief welcoming remarks.

In his welcoming remarks, Dr. Eugene Farley emphasized the significance of the Center for the Performing Arts. Dr. Farley cited the Center as a beautiful building, and practical, and one which will enable the College to create a better balance in both curriculum and in extra-curricular activities.

"We hope the availability of this building will encourage our students to develop interests that are independent of their academic work but which will be creative in their influence. We dare to hope that much-needed qualities of the spirit will be nurtured through a program that combines discipline in the sciences, the humanities, and the social studies with creativity in the performing arts. We anticipate that creative effort will cultivate artistic and spiritual resources which will give meaning and direction to our material growth.

SOME OF THE AUDIENCE GATHERED IN THE LOBBY PRIOR TO THE DEDICATION OF THE ARTS CENTER.

"Although the friends who have given this building wish to remain anonymous, I wish to express the warm gratitude of trustees, faculty, and students for this building and for all the opportunities it will open to faculty and students. My own gratitude I can never adequately express, for the completion of this Center marks another milestone in the development of the College. In the decades ahead it will enable the College to better serve both our students and our community."

Following Dr. Farley's comments, the first musical presentation was given in the Arts Center, starting with Wilkes College Chorus, directed by Richard Chapline, singing "Alleluia." College Chorus and Brass Ensemble then joined for "O, Clap Your Hands," and the College Concert Band, directed by Raymond J. Nutaitis, completed the program with "Fanfare and Allegro."

In expression of student appreciation for the Arts Center, Alfred Airola, president of Cue and Curtain, presented a four-part message to the College saying: "Thank you for your foresight, without which nothing can ever be undertaken; thank you for your courage, without which ideas remain nothing but blueprints; thank you for your continued support, without which this program would never reach completion; and thank you for your leadership, leadership which will inspire us to use this building to its greatest capabilities, and leadership which will inspire us to utilize our talents to the limits of our potential."

In special tribute to Leigh Allen, designer of the interior of the Arts Center, a certificate of appreciation was presented by Miss Annette Evans, in behalf of the Wilkes College Board of Trustees.

The ceremonies concluded with the College Alma Mater by the College Concert Band, joined in song by the audience and the College Chorus. Ushers for the dedication ceremonies were members of the Inter-Dormitory Council, members of the Student Government, and members of Cue and Curtain, the College drama group.

Invocation was offered by Reverend Lane D. Kilburn, CSC, president, King's College, and benediction by Dr. Abraham D. Barras, rabbi, Temple Israel.

Mr. Donald Oenslager Dedication Dinner Speaker

A correlation of the professional and educational theaters provided the background of the address given by Donald Oenslager, New York stage designer who served as consultant in this area for the Wilkes Center for the Performing Arts. Oenslager spoke at the dinner in the Hotel Sterling following the afternoon dedication ceremonies of the Wilkes Art Center.

Drawing attention to the last forty years in theater, Mr. Oenslager noted a considerable change and decline in the Broadway professional theater citing 228 productions in the 1924-25 season as compared to only 63 productions presented last season. Among the reasons for this change and decline, Oenslager said the foremost was a lack of plays being written by contemporary authors. Cost of productions has increased to the point of becoming extravagant, at least $125,000 for a play, and about $500,000 for a musical. Other reasons for the decline are power of unions and theaters being torn down to make room for parking lots.

As a result of this decline, Oenslager said, the theater of today has become a very routine, unimaginative place; standardized and full of Broadway know-how. The theater has forgotten its audience. Over the past few years there have occurred a decentralization of the theater and a flight of the intellectual theater to the university and civic theater.

"During these past forty years, professional theater has decreased in quantity and quality; whereas educational theater has increased greatly. Practically every college and university in the country today has its own theater, which plays an important role in education, but I think the theater itself is education. The educational theater building, such as the Wilkes College Center for the Performing Arts, becomes a status symbol of the cultural attainment of the educational institution."

Oenslager said almost all the new university theaters are superior to most professional theaters in relation to physical equipment and comfort. "They have become the central core of the performing arts of the college community to such a point that one might almost say the colleges and universities are in the theater business.

"Many of them are building massive structures, which, I wonder, with their scale and size, may often prove too large and too complicated for the college and university students to work. I wonder also if the elaborate programs do not make education institutions committed primarily to box office material."

The speaker said that every college and university should be able to indulge in the experimental productions, where the students can do it themselves, rather than the productions in all departments being primarily the creative endeavor of the faculty. Here he praised the dramatic efforts of Wilkes College, "which has always sought to encourage the full participation of students in every phase of theater productions, not only the acting phase."

The Madrigal Singers of Wilkes, directed by Richard Chapline, provided entertainment.

Presentation of an original poem by Alfred S. Groh was given by the author in special appreciation to Leigh Allen, for his untiring devotion of efforts and creative talents to the decor of the Wilkes Arts Center. It read:

Build me a house and let it stand,
A house of virtue in the land.
Build me a place and let it hold,
The days of my life as they unfold.
Let it keep from this time hence,
Some images of magnificence.
Let there be when we are gone,
A source of strength to build upon.

Invocation at the dedication dinner was given by Dr. Jule Ayers, First Presbyterian Church, Wilkes-Barre, and benediction by Reverend Aloysius Galvin, S.J., President, University of Scranton.

18TH Annual HOME- Coming

Wilkes College alumni celebrated their 18th Annual Homecoming on Friday and Saturday, November 5 and 6. Approximately 700-800 alumni participated in some or all of the Homecoming festivities. Under the general chairmanship of Russell Williams, '50, and various alumni committees, Homecoming Weekend began with "Kum-Bak Night" at the new Center For The Performing Arts.

"The Death of Bessie Smith," a one-act play by Edward Albee, was presented by members of Cue and Curtain. Alfred S. Groh directed the play and was assisted by Myranwy Williams. The Wilkes College Concert Band, directed by Raymond Nutaitis, presented an enjoyable program of concert music. These outstanding performances in the Center For The Performing Arts were received enthusiastically by an audience of approximately 350 persons.

A business meeting was held prior to the official program. Election of officers was the highlight of the meeting. Elected to guide the Wilkes College Alumni Association for the next year were Attorney Eugene Roth, '57, president; George Murdock, '60, vice president; Anita Janerich, '51, secretary; Attorney John Doran, '57, treasurer.

A committee of alumni judges, headed by Ken Fox, Nancy Davies Andreeko, John Campbell, and Thomas R. Price completed a review of all Homecoming displays in preparation for the awards presentation the following day. Attorney Gifford Cappellini, '45, served as chairman of Friday's activities. Later in the evening, alumni, faculty, and guests met in the Alexander Room of the Host Motel for a warm-up party.

Homecoming activities got off to an early start on Saturday with the Wilkes-Hofstra soccer game at 10:00 a.m. Many alumni watched the Wilkes Colonels triumph over the Hofstra Flying Dutchmen by a 5-1 score.

Homecoming Queen Lois Petroski anticipates the congratulatory kiss by Dr. Farley. In the background are Harry Wilson, escort of the Queen, Matt Fliss, homecoming student chairman, and Russell Williams, '50, General Chmn. of Homecoming.

Prior to the game, the student car caravan arrived at the new athletic field with the Homecoming Queen and her court. During the half-time, Miss Lois Petroski, a senior mathematics major, was crowned Homecoming Queen 1965 by Dr. Eugene S. Farley.

Homecoming Princesses were Miss Regina Watkins, a senior English major, and Miss Marie Persic, a senior psychology major. Gifts were presented the Queen and Princesses by the Alumni Association, the Student Government, the Beacon, and the Sophomore, Junior, and Senior classes.

Gore Hall, men's dormitory, won two trophies, one for the best over-all display, the other for the best display of men's dormitories. Weckesser Hall, women's dormitory, won the trophy in its area, and the Chemistry Club captured the award in the campus organization category. The Women's Chorus entry in the car caravan was judged the winner.

Dedication of the new athletic field was held during half-time. Alumni were thrilled and pleased to hear Dr. Farley name the new facilities "Ralston Field" in honor of Dean George F. Ralston who initiated the athletic program at Wilkes. Dean Ralston had no knowledge of this honor until the day of dedication.

The Banquet Room of the Holiday Inn Motel was the scene of the class reunion dinners on Saturday evening. Howard Ennis, '55, presided as toastmaster. Guests of honor were Dr. Farley, Mrs. Thornton Price, sister of Dr. Farley, Dr. and Mrs. Francis Michelin, and retiring alumni president Leonard Mulcahy and Mrs. Mulcahy. Alumni from the classes of '35, '40, '45, '50, '55, and '60 heard Dr. Farley report on the recent growth of the College. Dr. Farley cited the ever-important need for continuing and growing alumni support of the College. He pointed out the immediate and pressing need for a new library.

Later in the evening, hundreds of alumni and guests gathered in the Dorian Room of the Host Motel for the Annual Homecoming Dance, the concluding social event of the weekend. Ray Barno and his band provided music for dancing.

At 2:00 p.m. some 5,000 alumni, friends, and students of the College watched the Colonels' football team post a stunning 30-12 victory over the Delaware Valley Rams. The victory was the fourth straight for the Colonels and gave them a 6-1 record for the season. In addition, the win enabled Wilkes to be certain of a tie for the championship of the Middle Atlantic Conference.

The following alumni contributed to the art exhibit: Jan Pethick, '65; Edward Kay, '63; Romelle Gomba Pethick, '63; Bob Hrynkiw, '64; Bob Ford, '65; Jerry Zezza, '63; William Williams, '64; Keith Ackerman, '65; Virginia Mason, '64; and Nancy Tinklepaugh Armstrong, '62.

WHY ATH LET ICS ?

DEAN GEORGE F. RALSTON

One of the most pleasing events of the Homecoming Weekend was the naming of the new athletic facilities "Ralston Field." During the half-time ceremonies, George F. Ralston, Dean of Men, was honored for his dedicated service and loyalty to Wilkes and for initiating the athletic program at the College almost two decades ago.

Literally thousands of alumni have been influenced personally by the steadfastness of purpose and the dedication to quality education by Dean Ralston. Some of Dean Ralston's thoughts concerning the place of athletics in the program of the College are expressed by him in the following article.

"I am happy to make up this financial deficit to the best laboratory in the University," is the statement attributed to Dr. Conant as he aligned the affairs of his office at the time of his retirement as President of Harvard. He was referring to the Athletic Department. Is this not a succinct answer to our question?

In the United States our educational philosophy holds firm the conviction that all men are entitled to an opportunity to develop their capacities to the highest level of efficiency in order to compete in the race of life. This fundamental educational concept is the basic philosophy behind collegiate athletics. Every student has a chance to attempt to make the team. There are no restrictions as to race, color, creed, or social position. Any boy who is willing to pay the price has a chance and has been invited to compete.

All sports, football in particular, are laboratories in the educational process. Play has been a natural and basic need of human beings throughout the ages, and competitive athletics makes a major contribution to personality. The lessons in teamwork and sportsmanship are the big gains. In the rapid give and take of the competition, the individual is motivated to do his utmost. He gives lavishly of himself, physically and mentally, virtually forgetting himself as he works with others in the heat of the contest. The benefits for maturity of personality are considerable. Such positive personality traits as skill, fitness, determination, humility, patience, stability, optimism, and adaptability are abundantly cultivated in the "best Laboratory," competitive sports. Furthermore, athletics requires the utmost of a participant, for when a man's desire falls short of passion — their is no roster to accommodate him.

In three important areas the laboratory of competitive athletics finds its place in society.

First, the purpose or objective of all educational institutions is, in simplest terms, to promote the "achievement of excellence" in intellect, body, and character. These three elements are interrelated to such an extent that individual excellence cannot be wholly achieved when any of the three is lacking.

Second, the learning process itself occurs only in individuals. It is an attractive and continuous process influenced by many factors in which the individual develops and grows. Much learning is imaginative in nature. Every adult is thus a teacher by precept and example. The kind of life adults lead is, educationally speaking, probably more significant than exposure to book learning in school. But to make people better is the task of schools, and therefore every educational program — academic, extra-curricular and athletic — must be organized and directed to provide a learning experience contributing to the development of the intellect, body, and character. On this point, the proof of the athletic pudding is the quality of the man produced through experience in athletics.

Third, games and sports, both individual and team, are essential activities in a healthy and happy society. Participation in games and sports is an important learning experience for the individual and such participation, if properly controlled and directed, will contribute to the development of mind, body, and character.

In the classroom we learn of the wonders of science, history, and the experiences of man's past. In our extra curriculum, outside the classroom, yet within the college, we learn about ourselves and we tap the unlimited strength of our inner resources as we test them against those of other men. Thus we learn the value of team work; when we subordinate ourselves to one objective, we discover the importance of leadership as well as fellowship.

The more sports we have and the greater number who participate, the better so long as the purpose is basically educational. We require that our coaches be teachers and not merely promoters.

There is one final and challenging need for competitive athletics in our program. In these days of cold wars, intrigue, broken treaties, and mistaken ideals, we need a renewal of faith in human honor. Competitive sport — with its adherence to the rules, and its flag of idealism held high, whether the fight be going for or against — can be a saving grace for our world if only we dedicate ourselves to a new summons, not only to the letter of the rules, but in the spirit of sportsmanship.

WILKES COLLEGE
WILKES-BARRE,
PENNSYLVANIA 18703
November, 1965

Dear Fellow Alumni:

As Chairman of the 1965 Annual Alumni Campaign and on behalf of Wilkes College, I would like to express appreciation and sincere thanks to all Wilkes alumni who participated in the recent alumni appeal.

In particular, I desire to call attention to the outstanding participation of the Class of 1965 in establishing the Class of 1965 Fund.

The conclusion of the 1965 Alumni Campaign resulted in a significant increase of alumni participation and financial support for Wilkes College.

The 1963 Campaign saw 20.9% or 739 alumni participating; total support that year was $14,589.76. The 1964 Campaign saw 31.8% or 1,214 alumni participating; total support that year was $24,745.00.

In contrast, the 1965 Campaign saw 35.1% or 1,444 alumni participating; total support this year is $29,923.85.

The 1965 Campaign surpassed last year's results with an alumni increase of 3.3% in participation and $5,178.85 in total amount pledged. This demonstration of ever-increasing support makes us confident that even more alumni of Wilkes will participate in next year's Campaign.

Once again, on behalf of our College, I extend my heartfelt thanks.

Sincerely,

John D. Doran

WILKES Colonels MAC CHAMPS

by Clark Line '66

A success story in anybody's league was written by the Wilkes Colonels this season as the Blue and Gold proved to be the Cinderella team of the Middle Atlantic Conference by copping the Northern Division crown among small colleges. This feat, in itself an achievement, takes on added proportions when one considers that a year ago the Colonels were wallowing in the MAC cellar, winning but one game all season.

The Colonels gave notice of things to come when they rolled up a 24-16 win over Lebanon Valley in the home opener. The young Colonel team looked very sharp and unveiled one of the hardest hitting offensive and defensive lines in many years. Wilkes went on to beat Moravian for the first time in 10 years before dropping their only contest in the campaign to Upsala. Ursinus wilted to the tune of 34-0 before coach Rellie Schmidt's ground machine and from then on it was all Wilkes.

The Colonels were assured of at least a tie for the MAC title when Juniata bowed 30-20, a week after Muhlenburg was soundly whipped 34-12. Delaware Valley fell by the same score at the Colonels' homecoming in a non-conference tilt.

Full of optimism and with the scent of the championship in the air, Wilkes travelled to Reading for the final encounter of the season at Albright. The Lions had an upset in mind and the Wilkes fans were understandably anxious as the score stood 7-7 in the second period.

J.; William Stinger, Graterford; Ralph Hendershot, York; Joseph Roszko, Dupont; John Jarvela, Fitchburg, Mass.; Ray Lowery, Wilkes-Barre; Tom Ambrosi, Denville, N. J.; John Gardner, Forty Fort; Patrick Sweeney, Wilkes-Barre; Roger Beatty, Exeter.

SECOND Head Coach Roland Schmidt; Paul Merrill, Nanticoke; Michael Sawchuk, Nanticoke; George Krip, Cranford, N. J.; Peter Polashenski, Drums; Douglas Forde, West Islip, N. Y.; Charles Morgan, Dallas; William Hinkle, Roselle Park, N. J.; Joseph Frappolli, Florence, N. J.; Angelo Loverro, East Islip, N. Y.; Joseph Wiendl, Westfield, N. J.; Tim Stott, Pottstown, Pa.; James Wolfe, Forty Fort; William Layden, Wilkes-Barre; Henry O'Reilly, Dobbs Ferry, N. Y.; Daniel Malloy, Trucksville; Wayne Bloomberg, Wilkes-Barre; Mike Connolly, Luzerne; Paul Kane, Wilkes-Barre; Assistant Coach John Rowlands.

THIRD Assistant Coach Jonah Goobic; John Chaump, West Pittston; John Donn, Larksville; Jay Holliday, Rockville, Md.; Bruce Comstock, West Pittston; Bernard Vinovski, Luzerne; Roland Wroten, Pittsburg; Joseph Skvarla, Plymouth; Michael Babuschak, Wilkes-Barre; Richard Beatty, Mountain Lakes, N. Paul Purta, fullback, churns up yardage for the Colonels . . .

Albright seemed on the move to paydirt and the go-ahead score when defensive back Don Malloy picked off a Ron Shellhammer pass and tightroped down the sidelines for a 63 yard touchdown romp. For the rest of the game Albright was merely on the field as Wilkes posted 23 points in the second half for a 37-7 route over the outclassed Lions.

With a team composed entirely of underclassmen, Coach Schmidt will be looking for another banner year next season.

Rich Roshong, Wilkes' leading ground gainer, will lead a returning backfield from his quarterback position. Roshong led the MAC in individual total offense with 939 yards before adding 26 yards rushing and 7 yards passing against Albright. Paul Purta, Ray Lowery, Roger Beatty, John Gardner, and Mike Connolly will all be returning next season. Purta, the Colonels place-kicker and part-time punter, gained 68 yards to lead the Colonels in rushing against Albright, while booting all five conversions. Purta has seldom missed the point-after attempt this season and has kicked several field goals as well.

The Colonels' success has been due largely to a vicious line, both offensively and defensively. Led by Al Yatko and P. J. Kane and with such notable performers as Ralph Hendershot, Brinley Varchol, Jack Gallagher, Jim Wolfe, Pat Sweeney, Bill Layden, Rich Verhanovitz, Bill Schneider, Paul Merrill, Ed Davies, and Angelo Loverro, the Wilkes team captured team honors in rushing defense and total defense. Competitors were allowed only 163 yards on the ground and a total of 812 yards for the season. Wilkes scored 193 points in the campaign and rushed for 1,963 yards with a total offense of 2,430 yards to lead the league in these divisions.

Four Wilkes players were named to the ECAC All-East team this season, with Ray Lowery, Paul Purta, Brinley Varchol and Al Yatko gaining the honors.

An interesting note on the season is the fact that many schools were disappointed on their Homecoming and Parents' Days when Wilkes rode roughshod over their teams. It seems that the Colonels were considered an easy mark on the schedule much to the chagrin of many an MAC competitor.

SOCCER SEASON SUCCESSFUL

The Wilkes soccer team, somewhat overshadowed by a championship football squad this season, has made a worthy account of itself by improving upon a 1-8-3 log registered last year. Coach Jim Ferris' booters rounded out the season with a 7-5 record.

The soccer squad was paced by Joe Kiefer, Don Spruck, Rick Harmon, Rich Beck and Mike Hudick. Hudick and Beck won acclaim last season by being named to the MAC All-East soccer squad at the close of the season.

The season proved to be one of several firsts for the Colonels booters. Wilkes beat Stevens Institute of Technology for the first time in 10 years and set a new College season scoring record with a 5-1 win over Hofstra. The victory over Hofstra brought the Colonels' season scoring to 30 points which battered the old mark of 26 points set by the 1955 team.

The season began as an up and down battle, with Wilkes coming to life with a 4-1 victory over Wagner to break the ice as the Colonels moved to a .500 percentage season. Wagner had been beaten only once in 8 previous outings.

Wilkes closed out its season at Drew University on an unhappy note by dropping a 5-2 decision in bringing their record to 6-5.

Rich Beck and Joe Kiefer scored the Wilkes goals to give the Ferrismen a 2-1 halftime lead, but Drew regained its footing to by-pass the Colonels in the second half.

Mike Hudick, Earl Eckhart and Rick Bucko played their final game for Wilkes.

It seems that the sports picture at the College is finally beginning to brighten. A little more assistance to student athletes has no doubt had some effect and with the winning ways of the Colonels, a further attraction has been extended to graduating high school athletes who qualify for admission.
