Candidates for deans announced

by Ellen Campbell

The names of the deans slated to head the newly formed College of Arts and Sciences, the School of Engineering and Physical Sciences, and the School of Business and Economics will be announced by the end of the week, according to President Christopher N. Breiseth. Breiseth said that the new structure will create a new team which can sit down and do some joint thinking."

"The school structure gives independence," said Breiseth. "In Business and Engineering it will be important to put students in the same league with other schools," he added. "The Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences will have a major role in the redefinition of the core curriculum now underway," said the President.

Gerald Hartdagen, Dean of Academic Affairs, believes that this "academic affairs cabinet will give more people a broader perspective of the whole academic picture." "I am pleased the President has agreed that this is something that is necessary," Hartdagen said, "I think it will help me and the institution."

Hartdagen explained that the three new deans will work with the individual department chairpersons.

"The deans will be able to solve many of the problems that now come to me," he said. "This will take some of the pressure off me and allow me to visit the individual departments to see how things are going."

Both President Breiseth and Dean Hartdagen pointed out that the department chairpersons were instrumental in developing the new organizational structure.

Hartdagen believes there is overwhelming support for the new school structure and the new deans. "I feel this is as close to consensus as we are going to find."

The new school structure will go into effect on June 1, 1986.

Speech pathology program proposed

by Elizabeth Mazzullo

A few years from now, students may receive a B.S. in Communication Disorders. The proposed program, Bellucci said. He added that this team must report back to the Department of Education, which will then send a formal letter that the program has been approved. "Indications were that it would be approved," Bellucci said. Students who receive this degree will qualify for certification in speech correction (K-12) or will be prepared for graduate study.

A team from the Pennsylvania Department of Education visited Wilkes last week to evaluate the proposed program, Bellucci said. He added that this team must report back to the Department of Education, which will then send a formal letter that the program has been approved.

"Indications were that it would be approved," Bellucci said.

Students who receive this degree will qualify for certification in speech correction (K-12) or will be prepared for graduate study.

A career with a B.S. in Communication Disorders, according to Bellucci, involves administering hearing tests in schools and working with children who lisp or stutter, or with special education students and their parents and teachers. He said that someone with this degree could also teach speech to deaf children.

A graduate program in Speech Pathology would prepare a student to work with stroke victims and to teach them to speak again, Bellucci said.

When the program is set up, Bellucci said, probably one full-time and two part-time professors will be hired. Equipment for the program will cost approximately $10,000.

Proposed courses for a major in Communication Disorders include courses in audiology and hearing science, in language disorders, in linguistics and in auditory rehabilitation. The proposed program also includes a "professional semester" to be taken in the student's senior year.

Terrific potential for student-faculty communication

The other day I had a conversation with one of my professors exhorting him to hold the final exam at his house and follow it with a party. I was kidding, of course. But he took me seriously enough to explain that were his house closer to the campus, he would gladly invite students to visit. He went on to say that some of the best times he had as an undergraduate were spent at his professors' homes. He asked is the same weren't true for me, if I haven't spent many a merry time with some of my professors. My reply, to be honest, was no. I believe I went to a History Department Christmas party, but aside from that, I have never conversed in depth with my professors.

Why is this? Certainly, I may not be the most personable social guest, but I'm sure I don't drool, or eat with my fingers, and I never bring my family photo albums to show my baby pictures. Perhaps my professors are worried that our conversation will appear in The Beacon. Poor excuses these may be, I have yet to have coffee with one of my professors. And I do not think I am alone. But this is not the place blame on the faculty, although faculty should be more encouraging and willing. But the students need to be more interested and less intimidated. It's a two way street.

One could have the attitude that student-faculty conversations and debates might exist at other schools, but not at Wilkes. And in large part this is true. But take a moment to consider the potential for dialogue between students and faculty at Wilkes. Wilkes is small with a good faculty-student ratio. In fact, this camaraderie could and should be as much a feature of Wilkes as the historical buildings. Think what it could mean for the campus. Students might be more interested in their classes if they knew their professor's were real people.

We should take our cue from the President who has initiated a form of communication which is truly refreshing. The President and Mrs. Breiseth have dinner in the Cafeteria with residents of a particular dorm every week. And each dorm is encouraged to invite a favorite faculty member. Thus, students, faculty, and administration meet for some long-awaited communication.

In an effort to encourage "chatting" between the English faculty and its students, several English majors have planned an informal "Coffee Chat" in the Alumni House next Thursday. Let's hope this is a spark for more social gatherings with students and faculty across campus. Such sincere and genuine communication among campus constituents is desperately needed at Wilkes.

Another nursing major "fed-up" with Department

Dear Editor:

I am writing this letter in response to an article in last week's Beacon entitled "Annoyed nursing major regrets $35,000 dollar investment."

I am one of the many members of the "five year" nursing major club. Due to the wonderful rules governing the Wilkes College Nursing Department I failed nursing by mere tenths of a percentage point. Upon learning of the Nursing Department's new rounding-up rule I am very annoyed, disgusted, and disappointed. Many of us (the five year members) would like to know the real reason that has prompted this change in legislature. Of course when many of us needed the extra tenths of a grade point we were told, "I'm sorry but you know the rules." Anytime questions are asked of the Nursing Department most of us get the usual run-around or the "you know how it is" answer. Well I for one am getting sick of getting the run-around. I would like everyone on this campus to know what it is like to fail nursing. After your failure you become a nobody at Wilkes, and within the Nursing Department. I did not hear from the Nursing Department until registration for the following year.

Perhaps the thing that distresses me most about our Nursing Department is their attitudes towards honesty. They stress honesty. Be honest with your classmates, be honest about your mistakes, be honest with your patients and above all, be honest with yourself. However, I fail to see the Nursing Department being honest with me or any other nursing majors. Recently, Pam Baker and Virginia Nehring stepped down as level coordinator for the juniors and the department head respectfully. Many of us are wondering what the real reasons were for the change and why everything was so hush-hush. Another thing that bothers me is why were the nursing majors informed about Virginia Nehring's resignation in The Beacon. Why were we not told in nursing class or clinical? Everything is so confidential in the Nursing Department but I would like to remind them that we are the ones paying their salary. We do have the right to know what is going on!

In closure I would also like to comment on our wonderful clinical practice. I don't know if there are any other majors on this campus that are required to spend between 3-16 hours a week in a practice and receive zero credits for it. However, if you fail to meet all the clinical objectives you fail clinical and consequently you fail nursing. Why do you fail nursing if clinical does not count towards credits or your nursing grade. I guess in short I am just another one of these unhappy nursing majors.

Sincerely,
Fed-up with the Nursing Department

O'Neill praises Talent Show effort

To the Editor:

I would like to acknowledge publicly the students and faculty who helped make the Cue 'n' Curtain talent show last week such a success. Cue 'n' Curtain club members, especially Andrea Bertha and Michelle Amieri, worked long and hard to make the program run smoothly. The audience, primarily students, was responsive and supportive; they also contributed to the amount Theater Fund during the show.

A note of recognition ought to go out to Tom Harding of the admissions office and to Howard Swain of the chemistry department for breaking down some barriers to perform in a student showcase. Thanks, too, go out to the judges, Jane Elmes, Brad Kinney, and Walter Karpnich, who shared the difficult task of awarding prizes.

The students who took part in the show displayed genuine energy and real talent. And, they were cooperative and professional backstage as well. The Wilkes community ought to take some pride in the fact that there are so many talented and creative students and faculty here; I only hope that everyone at the College will make a stronger commitment to nurturing and supporting their endeavors.

Sincerely,
Michael O'Neill

Uncle Vanya wins award

Anton Chekov's Uncle Vanya directed by Dr. Michael O'Neill, Assistant Professor of Speech, Communication, and Theater at Wilkes College, has been awarded first place for lighting by the American College and Theater Festival.

The presentation was made on February 23 at the Region II Festival held at Pottsville, Maryland, by judges who saw all of the 45 plays presented in the Mid-Atlantic Region. The Mid-Atlantic Region consists of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Delaware, and the District of Columbia.

Pleased to learn that Uncle Vanya had been chosen to receive the award, O'Neill said, "The award goes to production and to our eyes--but really to the designer, Klaus Holm, Associate Professor of Theater Arts." O'Neill adds, "This year's award is especially gratifying because of Klaus's illness, also because student lighting crews were so instrumental in making it work."

The American College and Theater Festival Award is "A fairly prestigious award and it's the second year in a row that Wilkes has been cited for quality theater." Wilkes competed against schools such as Villanova, Lehigh University, Pittsburgh, Ithaca College, University of Maryland, Dickinson, and Lycoming.

According to O'Neill, "The American College and Theater Festival Award is a nation wide effort among all colleges to engage in theatrical dialogue with one another and to encourage and support participation."

Uncle Vanya was produced by Wilkes College in cooperation with Kings College Theater Department. Lighting was provided under the direction of Klaus Holm, who is presently recovering from an illness.

Levin to speak at Grace Kimball Memorial Lecture

The Wilkes College Department of Biology is pleased to present a special lecture-event on the evening of Thursday, April 17, 1986. The evening will begin at 8:15 pm in Stark Hall room 101.

This is the first Grace Kimball Memorial Lecture in Biology which the department has arranged as an annual occurrence for the spring of each year. The event was organized to honor the memory of Dr. Grace Kimball, a former faculty member of the Biology Department.

After serving many years as the microbiologist at the College, Dr. Kimball retired as Professor Emeritus in 1975. She was well regarded as colleague, teacher and friend to all she knew and the smallness of her stature let her humorously regard herself as a true "micro"-biologist.

After her passing two years ago, it was announced that she had remembered Wilkes College generously in her will. From that gift the Biology Department arranged to give a number of scholarships to beginning, promising biology majors in her name.

The gift also provides funding for an annual special memorial lecture presenting a notable scientist performing important work in contemporary biology.

The lecturer for this inaugural event is Dr. Simon Levin of the Division of Biological Sciences, Section of Ecology and Biosystematics at Cornell University in Ithaca, New York.

Dr. Levin has an outstanding international reputation for his research work and is the author of over 100 scientific articles and many books. He holds memberships in a great number of prestigious scientific societies and organizations.

Dr. Levin also serves on a number of blue-ribbon committees and panels concerned with environmental issues.

His topic for the Kimball Memorial Lecture is entitled "The Impact of Genetically-Engineered Organisms on the Environment." This is an area in which Dr. Levin is particularly knowledgeable because of his position of consultant to the National Institutes of Health.

The lecture is designed for a general audience and should have broad appeal. The faculty of the Biology Department are honored to present this special event and cordially invite everyone to attend.

Wilkes and Kings join hands to help the needy

by Michelle Munday

By now, almost everyone has heard about the Hands Across America campaign. This event, which will take place on May 25 will start in Los Angeles, California and end in New York City.

The chain will consist of approximately five million people. All of the money raised by this event will go to help our nation's hungry and homeless.

Recently, the Wilkes College Circle K Club has joined forces with The King's College EKT Sorority to help the needy people in Wilkes-Barre.

The two organizations will sponsor a campaign called Hands Across Wilkes-Barre which will take place on Sunday, April 27.

The chain, which will remain intact for approximately ten minutes and consist of at least 1,632 people, will begin at the Dorothy Dickson Darte Center for the Performing Arts, run across the Market Street bridge, and end at the Courthouse near King's College.

The proceeds from this campaign will go to Saint Vincent DePaul's Soup Kitchen and Domestic Violence in the Wilkes-Barre area.

King's College already has approximately 400 students signed up to participate in the event. They are excited about the campaign and want to get Wilkes involved.

Anyone wishing to participate and help the cause can preregister on April 27 between 12:00 p.m. and 12:45 p.m. in the Stark Learning Center lobby or by contacting Rick Heck. The cost of the event is $2.00.

Circle K and the King's sorority hope the Hands Across Wilkes-Barre campaign will be a success, and strongly urge students to participate.

There will be a picnic at Kirby Park after the chain is broken for all those who participated. This will be a bring your own lunch and drink (no alcoholic beverages) picnic. Entertainment will be provided by: Wanda, a folk guitarist, the Wilkes College Jazz Quartet, a religious group called Extra, and the King's College Minstrels.

Anyone wishing to receive more information about the Hands Across Wilkes-Barre campaign can contact the Circle K club at extension 279.

Student Government leaders try to prevent student aid cuts

by Michelle Munday

Every month, the five area colleges' (Marywood, LCC, Misericordia, Kings, and Wilkes) Student Government leaders get together to discuss the problems facing their organizations and the problems facing college students in general.

This month, the leaders discussed the problem students may have concerning the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Law. This law says that if the federal budget is not balanced to meet the deficit, cuts will have to be made.

The leaders of SG believe that the government will try to balance the budget by cutting student aid. If this happens, they believe that it may have an effect on the future of some college students. Some students may be forced to drop out of school or some may be forced to attend only part time.

Caryl Goldsmith, the president of SG at Wilkes, believes that this is a serious problem. She said many students need to be educated about what is going on with their aid. After all, if they don't express a concern now, they may be sorry in the future.

The various SG presidents came up with an idea for expressing their concern. Each of the leaders sat down and wrote a basic letter expressing their concern for the need of students to get a higher education.

They plan to make several hundred copies of the letters and have students sign them. After the letters are signed, they will be taken to Senator Arlen Specter's office.

The leaders of SG hope that by showing Specter that students do care about what happens to their financial aid, he will take a stand and represent the students.

The letters will be placed at several locations on the Wilkes campus. Students are asked to read and sign the letter if they care about what happens to their financial aid.

Students can make a difference. If they don't express a concern for their college education, they might not have a future to worry about.

Wilkes students set their sights on graduate studies

Four more students from the Wilkes College Department of Biology have been added to a growing list of graduate school acceptances for the fall of 1986.

These newest additions are: Lisa Kotch, Hanover Township, who will attend Temple University Dental School; Kimberly Land, Minersville, who will also attend Temple University Dental School; Dave Thomas, Plymouth, who was accepted into the dental program at Tufts University; and Michael Everett, Lehighton, who will enter the dental program at the University of Maryland.

Land is a four-year member of the Wilkes Department of Biology, and is an active member of the Biology Club. Her decision to attend dental school was made early in her academic career, and she credits the college with helping her attain her goal.

"Wilkes is known for having good students," Land says, "especially among graduate schools. In preparing for my future in dentistry, I've actually worked in dental offices with Temple alumni, and they know about Wilkes' reputation."

Land also sees the Wilkes/Temple University affiliation as an asset to students like herself.

"Both schools have a familiarity, an affinity for each other, which can be a tremendous help in making the jump to grad school. I was surprised--and happy--to find that the course requirement list for Temple almost exactly parallels the undergraduate biology curriculum here. There's no question, in a case like that, that you're getting the best possible preparation."

Kotch, a fellow Bio Club member and a Dean's List student, agrees with Land. What our background is now, puts us ahead of a lot of other students going into dentistry. Very simply, we've had the opportunity to take courses, such as histology, that others won't get until they're actually into their graduate work. I count that as a definite edge."

That kind of "edge" in preparation for graduate study stands out in the minds of many Wilkes biology students, such as Dave Thomas and Mike Everett.

Thomas, who decided on Tufts after being accepted at several other graduate schools, sees the liberal arts nature of his undergraduate education as giving him the edge that made it possible to pick from the top dental schools in the country.

"At grad schools, they look for the liberal arts student. After you finish your first few years of college, you should be able to talk about a variety of things, not just your primary area of interest. Concentration on one subject is what graduate work is all about--at the undergraduate level, exposure to different subjects counts, too," says Thomas.

Everett also mentions the value of a liberal arts program at the undergraduate level, saying, "I like the idea of the liberal arts focus. To me, it means that I'm coming out of years of study as a well-rounded person, not just the one that's 'stuck' in biology. Sure, I'll be doing a lot of biology at the University of Maryland, but the broad basis I got at Wilkes will stay with me."

Through affiliations with some of the country's best graduate schools, students at Wilkes may begin their graduate study at the completion of the third or fourth year of undergraduate work.

Kotch and Land will enter Temple after completing undergraduate degrees in May, while Thomas and Everett will go into their dental programs following their junior year at Wilkes.

Upon completing one successful year at the graduate level, they will then petition Wilkes College for their undergraduate degrees, which they should receive in May of 1987. Such an arrangement with affiliated institutions allows Wilkes students to pursue graduate study at their own pace and, in many cases, to get a head start on advanced work.

Although entering such stringent academic programs after only three years of college may seem a bit ambitious, Thomas and Everett are secure about their prospects.

According to Everett, "My years at Wilkes taught me that, if you like the environment, you will excel. I think we've all been wise in choosing schools that suited us, and we're ready to take the next step."

All four students have prepared carefully for their careers. In addition to maintaining sound academic records, they have excelled outside of the classroom.

Land, for example, has worked for several years in a dentist's office, and was employed at the Wilkes College Alumni Office.

Kotch, a student employee of the Wilkes Computer Center, is also active in the Big Brother/Sister program.

Thomas has served as Vice President of the Human Services Committee on campus, and is a Biology Club member and Dean's List student.

Everett has been a Biology Club member, Sophomore Class Representative, and has attained Dean's List status every semester.

According to Dr. Ralph Rozelle, Dean of Health Sciences at Wilkes, 1986 has been a successful year for students entering graduate schools.

Health science majors have been accepted into programs in dentistry, optometry, podiatry, and medical technology. In fact, some programs report a one-hundred percent acceptance rate, while acceptances in other programs are still being announced. Although such a record may seem enviable, with students like Kotch, Land, Thomas, and Everett as representatives, it's not surprising.

Beacon advisor dismissed

by Pamela Jones

The Wilkes College newspaper, The Beacon, will experience a change of hands next fall semester. The present faculty advisor, David W. Evans, an instructor in the Language and Literature Department, has been dismissed from his duties.

Evans' one year appointment will conclude after the final issue of The Beacon has been completed. Taking over the position will be Tom Bigler from The Times Leader.

Mr. Evans was informed of his dismissal on March 25 during the spring recess. According to Evans, Dr. Robert Heaman informed him of President Christopher Breiseth's decision. The advisor position is a presidential appointment, giving the President a final say in matters concerning The Beacon advisory position.

Evans stated that the reason given for his expulsion was that, "they [the administration] want to give the position to Tom Bigler so that they can move The Beacon from being de facto under the English department to de jure under the communications department."

Although the last five advisors have been from the English department, the time spanned no more than ten years. Evans noted that the longest appointment as advisor was Tom Moran who was the Public Relations Director.

Mr. Evans questioned the belief that the control of the newspaper belongs with communications, should be part of communications, and that it belongs that way.

As stated by Evans, "I was looking forward to working with The Beacon next year. I thought we put out a good paper this year, especially during the spring semester. I know many people have commented on the quality of this year's Beacon . . . , so I wonder why they're changing horses in mid stream when things in most people's eyes are going well."

When asked how he feels about his dismissal, Mr. Evans said, "I really enjoy my work with The Beacon. I find it an excellent educational tool. It gives students the ability to apply what they know academically but gives them a chance to work with other people. This is an important part of being a success in the world." Evans also noted that it gives students the analytical ability that is supposed to be the basis of the liberal arts.

Mr. Evans will regret terminating his time as The Beacon advisor. According to Evans, "I believe that Tom Bigler could be a good advisor." He also revealed his regrets about leaving the position stating, "I do have a tender regard for The Beacon and the school."

Are Wilkes students good to the last drop?

by Dauryne Shaffer

Is Wilkes College the Home of the Wimps? Does apathy reign over residence halls, clubs, and faculty? The statistics from the last Blood Drive seem to indicate these statements are true. On that day, only 161 units of blood were collected from a campus that boasts a population of approximately 1700 full-time students, 138 full-time faculty, and clerical workers. This means that only about 7.79% of the campus population took the time to donate blood and possibly save a life.

Does this sound melodramatic to you? Not to someone on the receiving end of an empty I.V. This is not to belittle any of the residence halls or campus organizations that actually did put forth an effort. The Biology Club and ROTC tied for top honors—each brought in 7.6% of the 161 pints donated. Circle K is next in "kudos" with 5.2%. Of the residence halls, Evans 4th came in first with 2.9%, followed by Colonels, Evans 2nd, Delaware, and Miner 3rd, each supplying 2.3%. One depressing residence hall statistic was that 14 of them were represented by only one or two donors.

In the end, the campus'

women proved braver than their supposed macho counterparts. The final percentages in this battle of the sexes: women-55%, men-45%.

After seeing these figures it is easy to understand why the Red Cross is desperate for donors. With the demand outweighing the supply by far and with the myth of the risk of contracting AIDS an easy excuse for donors, it's almost like trying to get blood from a stone. Dracula had more luck than the volunteers in the gym on the day of the Blood Drive.

Well, Wilkes people, you'll have a chance to redeem yourselves. There will be another Red Cross Blood Drive on Thursday, April 24th, in the Wilkes College Gymnasium. It will run from 10:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. Donating blood only takes 15-30 minutes of your time, and you get donuts and drinks for your effort.

Let's take the chance to show that Wilkes College is not populated by wimps. Shake off that winter apathy and bring that extra pint of yours to share with those who need it. For more information or answers to any questions you may have, call the College Health Service at extension 494.

Spring is here! Give blood, starve a mosquito!

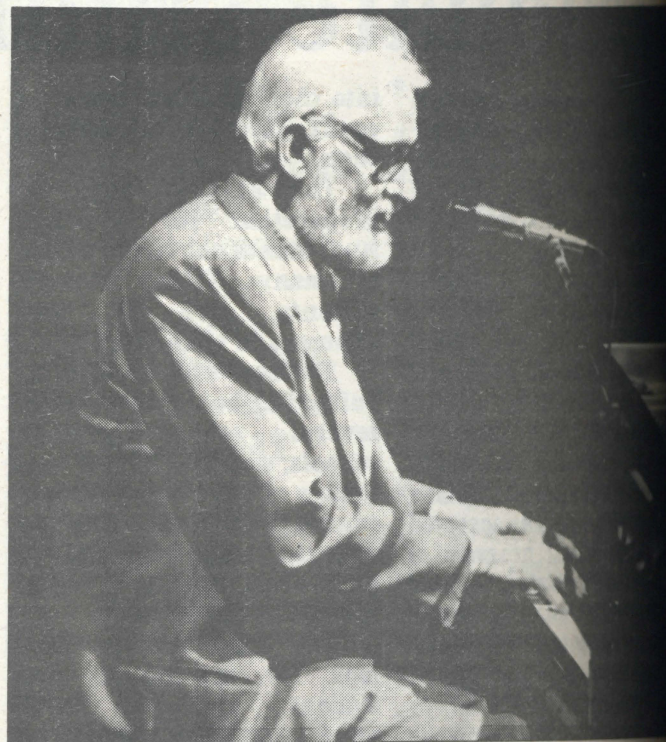

Hague entertains Wilkes audience

by Lorri Steinbacher and Amy Hancock

On Monday, April 14, the Wilkes College Concert and Lecture Series continued with a fascinating lecture by Albert Hague entitled Fame. From Albert Hague to Professor Shorofsky. Converting Your Education Into A Livelihood. Hague is perhaps best known as the cantankerous Professor Shorofsky on the television series Fame. He lectures at colleges when he is not working on the series or composing.

This lecture was perhaps the most entertaining and interesting installment in the series. Using stories from his own life and career as examples, Hague gave advice to students on how to use their education to their best advantage.

Although music majors may have been particularly interested in this lecture, much of the advice Hague gave could be applied universally. "Getting your first job is most important. . . You must give a total stranger the faith to give you a chance to do something you've never done before. . . There's only one way to do this—you must lie," advises Hague. "Only I don't call it lying. . . I call it simulating experience. Sounds benign and it works."

Although Hague was not advocating the use of outright lying as the best technique. He did feel that in certain cases it does not hurt. He went on to explain how he secured his first job using this technique. Hague also accompanied himself on piano. Using the stories and music as props, Hague managed to convey his advice in a very interesting manner. He kept the audience laughing and sincerely interested.

Albert Hague was perhaps the highlight of the Concert and Lecture Series. He managed to present a lecture that informed as well as entertained.

Spring film series promises variety

by Amy Hancock

For those of us who find unusually artistic and cultural films more interesting than the carbon-copy movies of late, relief from boredom is in sight.

At 8:00 p.m. this evening, the First Presbyterian Church on the corner of Northampton and South Franklin Streets will get its Spring Film Series rolling. In conjunction with Wilkes College and Pennsylvania State University, Arts at Hayfield, the church will present one film per week for the next eight weeks.

Although they are not currently being commercially screened, these films represent the more creative vein of cinema. Because most of them reflect a foreign influence, each non-American director will assuredly present a novel perspective and style.

Tonight's film, Paris, Texas, was directed by Wim Wenders, a German, written by award-winning playwright Sam Shepard, and stars Nastassja Kinski and Harry Dean Stanton. This story "of a heartbroken man on a journey of self discovery" was the unanimous grand prize winner at the Cannes Film Festival. Films to be shown in coming weeks include Atlantic City, M. Cielos and Whispers, The Emerald Forest, The Stunt Man, Kagemusha, and 1984. Each was made in either France, Germany, Sweden, Japan, England, or the United States, and directed by the likes of Ingmar Bergman, Louis Malle, and Fritz Lang.

With student admission at just $1.50, it will be hard to resist the opportunity to forget about homework for a couple hours. For more information, call the First Presbyterian Church at 824-2478.

Toni C visits

by Beth Mazzullo

On Tuesday, April 15, acclaimed writer Toni Bambara presented a workshop and a reading at the CPA lounge. The session was made possible through the Department of Language and the Hamilton Dickson Bequest. During the workshop, Bambara discussed topics as "writing as compulsion," keeping a notebook, and the decision to become a publishing contractor. In the second hour of the workshop, two student writers gathered for a group discussion of the workshop. She pointed out strengths and weaknesses in their works and offered helpful suggestions for improvement. At the reading, Bambara presented several of her works, including the title story from her collection Gorilla. She also read excerpts from the novel-in-progress Atlanta Missions and Children of the Blessing Comes. Bambara is the author of many award-winning stories, including the novel Home, which was published by American Book.

On Tuesday, April 15, acclaimed writer Toni Cade Bambara presented a writers' workshop and a reading in the CPA lounge. This presentation was made possible through the Department of Language and the Allen Hamilton Dickson bequest.

During the workshop, held from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m., student writers gathered to hear Bambara discuss such topics as "writing as a compulsion," keeping a writer's notebook, her decision to become a writer, and publishing contracts. In the second hour of the workshop, two students read short stories and Bambara led a group discussion and critique of the students' works. She pointed out the strengths and weaknesses of the works and offered helpful suggestions for improvement.

At the reading, held at 8 p.m., Bambara presented several of her works, including the title story from her collection Gorilla, My Love. She also read excerpts from the prologue of her novel-in-progress on the Atlanta Missing and Murdered Children Case, If Blessing Comes. A short question-and-answer period followed the reading.

Bambara is the author of many award-winning works, including the novel The Salt Eaters, which won the 1981 American Book Award.

ALLARD K. LOWENSTEIN FELLOWSHIP SUMMER PROGRAM IN WASHINGTON DC

Sponsored by the Americans for Democratic Action (ADA) offers college students a great opportunity to learn in Washington, D.C. this summer.

Placed as interns in Congressional offices, students are provided with a practical, hands-on knowledge of how the government functions and a close look at the "behind the scenes" politics. They also take part in a vigorous schedule of public policy seminars specially created for the fellowship and expand their organizing skills through workshops designed to teach them the nuts and bolts of building coalitions between campus and community groups, lobbying legislators, using the media to mold public opinion, and motivating students to become active. The fellowship is now accepting applications for the twelve position available in the six-week, June 1986 program (deadline April 30th, 1986.) Interested students should contact Marge Sklencar, c/o Lowenstein Fellowship, 1411 K. Street, NW, Suite 850, Washington, DC 20005.

Ellen's Column A different perspective

Can we talk?

by Ellen Campbell

This week I reached a milestone in my college career at Wilkes. I sat in the Student Center with one of my professors, drank a cup of tea, and talked for forty-five minutes about English. Believe it or not, this was the first time in two years that I have sat, unplanned and unstructured, to chat informally with a faculty member.

Before this chance meeting occurred this week, I had just discussed this lack of informal dialogue between students and faculty with my friend and our editor. She told me that, "before I graduate I am going to corner (Dr.) Kaska and go over to (Dr.) Rizzo's house and pound on his door." She has a need to talk to two significant people in her life outside of the boundaries and barriers of the classroom.

A third piece was added to this interesting puzzle when I interviewed our president this week. During the course of the conversation, we discussed the need for dialogue on this campus. We talked about how the size and atmosphere at Wilkes fosters great potential for building relationships, but, as President Breiseth said, "We have gotten a little rusty."

Some of us would like to see students lubricate the rusty rituals which now compartmentalize us into the rigid roles of students and teachers. We would like to promote a fellowship between learners and encourage opportunities for students and faculty to relate on levels differing from the traditional pattern in the classroom.

The Language and Literature Department is planning an informal get-together for next week for faculty and students to do exactly that. Maybe other departments will hold similar get-togethers. It doesn't take much effort--a time, a place, and a willingness to talk.

President Breiseth told me, "We are not good at getting together." I have a feeling that this is one time he would be more than happy to be proven wrong!

CRITTER'S WEEKEND FORECAST

Aries—A memorable weekend is in store for you, Aries. You'll be full of energy and enthusiasm. Try to clear up any misunderstandings you've had with friends in the past couple weeks.

Taurus—Let your inhibitions run wild for a couple days. You've been wasting too much time worrying lately. For just a little while, give yourself a break from all the tension and pressure of college life.

Gemini—The end of the semester is much closer than you realize. You're doing great, so don't fret. When it's finally all over, you'll have to reward yourself.

Cancer—Those pent-up feelings will have to be voiced sometime soon, so go ahead and say what's on your mind. Everybody involved (especially you) will feel much better.

Leo—Although it will be a long time before you have as much fun as you did last weekend, you'll find good times wherever you go this weekend, too. An Aquarius will make good company.

Virgo—You may start to think that a casual acquaintance would be nicer to have as a close friend. It's time you enlarged your small circle of friends, anyway.

Libra—RELAX! If you would take life one step at a time, all of the things you worry about would just take care of themselves. You have a lot more going for you than you think.

Scorpio—You're finally going to pay for your egotistical attitude this weekend. The people who know the real you will demand an end of your ridiculous behavior.

Sagittarius—Little by little, all your work is finally getting done. It's definitely time for a wild and crazy night out on the town. Still, be selective of the crowd with whom you socialize.

Capricorn—You'll be tempted to pick a fight with a friend. Save your defenses for when a certain Sagittarius seeks revenge on you. When you least expect it, the Sag will attack!

Aquarius—Don't let your shyness get the best of you this weekend. If you hesitate in saying or doing something because you feel insecure, you'll make a big mistake.

Pisces—A friend may seek your advice sometime this weekend. Be as helpful as you can because you might someday need help from this person. On Saturday, beware of any Aries friends.

Devils finish unbeaten

Devils win Capin Cup

by Mark Mercurio

The Devils record break-season came to an end on today evening. They defeated the Jaguars 3-2 to capture this year's Capin Cup.

The Devils opened up an early lead following goals from team captain Don Shaw and Jeff Wertz. However, the Jaguars pulled within one, with a goal from Chris Connelly. The Devils came right back as Matt Ryan scored on an assist from Gerard Piazza. With time running out in the first half, Greg Trapini put one by Devils' goalie Roy Delay to make the score 3-2.

In the second half, the Devils added to their lead with goals from Frank Wanzor and Jeff Wertz. The defense did their job as well. Frank Wanzor, Don Shaw, Bill Hankins, and goalie Roy Delay shut down the Jaguars the entire second half.

Stand outs for the Jaguars were Tom Salzburg, and Matt Wesel and goalie Bill Dengler.

Editors note: The Devils finished with an unblemished 16-0-0 record. The Devils are the only team in the short three year history of the floor hockey league to make this accomplishment.

Tennis

The Wilkes netmen under coach Dave Gayeski are still fighting for their first victory of the year.

They were blanked by Wright 9-0. After that match the team travelled to Lycoming where they dropped a 7-1 decision. Jim was picked up a victory for Colonels.

King's College racked up their eighth straight victory when they faced Wilkes. The score for that match was Wilkes picked up a victory in a doubles match with the team of Bottoman putting a point on the board.

The netmen will face Scranton, Elizabethtown, and Lehigh in their next three matches.

The Wilkes netwoman are now 3-2 after falling to Lycoming and defeating Juniata.

Chris Creegan was the only single winner for the Colonels in the loss to Lycoming. The team of Creegan-Wendorf also scored victories for Wilkes.

Creegan, Nancy Wendorf, Jennifer Briscoe and Laura Palya all won their singles matches to lead Coach Wingert's team to victory against Juniata.

Creegan and Palya are both 4-1 on the season.

The lady Colonels will be hosting Scranton and then will travel to FDU-Madison.

Rainey to return

Basketball fans can breathe a sigh of relief. Ron Rainey has been re-appointed as the head basketball coach at Wilkes College.

Dr. Christopher Breiseth announced that Coach Rainey has renewed his contract with Wilkes.

Rainey has a career record of 166-231, including a 75-84 mark at Wilkes. The Colonels finished this past season at 15-9 under Rainey.

Rainey has previously served as the head coach of the University of Delaware.

Welcome aboard!

by Mark Mercurio

The students and faculty of Wilkes College would like to welcome basketball recruit, Jim Nolan.

Jim, who is currently a senior at South Williamsport Area High School, will be attending Wilkes this fall.

Jim, a 6'0" guard, impressed many people with his basketball skill throughout his high school career. People were so impressed that he was offered scholarships from division I schools such as St. Joseph's and Colgate. But Jim turned them down in order to play division III basketball at Wilkes.

Jim's statistics include: 2,106 points over three varsity seasons, Lycoming County All-Time leading scorer, a career point per game average of 24.5, Player of the Year-West Branch Conference, senior year, All-state Honorable Mention sophomore, junior, and senior year, and he lead his team to the 1985-86 West Branch Conference Championship.

Jim will be attending Wilkes this fall. We would like to assure him that his decision to attend Wilkes was a wise choice.

Ladies drop two

by Mark Mercurio

The Wilkes College Softball team dropped two games to Susquehanna 1-0 and 5-4 Saturday.

In the first game, the Wilkes ladies were held to only four hits by Susquehanna pitcher, Judy Sholtio. Felicia McClymont supplied Susquehanna with all the runs they needed with a run-scoring single in the third inning.

Erika Oswald suffered the loss and Maureen Kennedy doubled in the losing effort.

Susquehanna scored a run in the bottom of the seventh inning to win the second game, with Amy Lewis scoring on a passed ball.

Margo Serafini had a double and a triple for Wilkes, and Diane Smeaton had two hits.

The losses dropped the lady Colonels to 2-5.

King's College swept to first-place honors in a five-college golf tournament held Monday at the Irem Temple Country Club, Dallas.

Final results were King's 411; Scranton 417; Wilkes 423; Moravian 426; and Susquehanna 430.

John Olszewski of King's College captured medalist honors with a 77. Runner-up to Olszewski for medal honors was Will Carey of Scranton at 78 as Charlie Rome of Wilkes fired an 80.

Wilkes scores included Rich Linkhorst, 83; Joe Mokay, 84; Jay Rubino, 88; Chris Brownawell, 88; Colin Mondero, 93. Wilkes College hosted the event.

First base coach John Kepics is having one heck of a year.

After having said that I can't think of much more to say about this year's edition of the Colonels. Wilkes is currently 2-10 and has been making more errors than a broken typewriter.

In all fairness, though, I feel I should mention two players who have been helping Coach Duliba get at least some sleep this year: pitcher Tom Salzburg and freshman firstbaseman/pitcher Eric Price.

On the mound, Salzburg has been looking very impressive so far this year. He has allowed only two earned runs in nineteen innings. Eric Price has been one of the most consistent players in the Colonel lineup.

Now, for better or for worse, let's take a look at how Wilkes fared this past week.

First Game Wilkes 3 Albright 10

The Colonels allowed a close game to get away from them in the sixth inning when the Lions of Albright tallied five runs.

Loser Don Shaw was tagged for eleven base hits in the contest while Wilkes was only able to collect four hits.

Centerfielder Brian Gorski led the attack with a single and a triple. Eric Price and Joe Rainelli added one hit each.

Second Game Wilkes 1 Albright 0

Tom Salzburg pitched a two-hit shutout to lead the Colonels to their second victory of the year.

The winning run came in the third inning when Joe Rainelli scored from third on a hit by freshman Mike Hercik.

The Colonels' bats were still out to lunch, however, as Wilkes was only able to record three hits. Joe Rainelli, Brian Gorski, and Frank Wanzor were the only successful Colonels at the plate.

Salzburg struckout seven and walked only two enroute to the win.

First Game Wilkes 9 Delaware Valley 16

Wilkes came out ready to play as they jumped to an early 3-0 lead in the first inning. Poor fielding by Wilkes allowed the Aggies to come from behind.

The Colonels committed seven costly errors in the contest.

Jamie Brasington suffered the loss and Eric Price blasted a two-run homer in a losing effort.

Second Game Wilkes 6 Del. Valley 9

The second game appeared to be a rerun of the first as the Colonels once again jumped out to an early lead only to commit five more errors and blow the lead.

Eric Price struck out seven and walked three in his second start of the year. Reliever Don Shaw struck out four and walked five.

Wilkes 8 Bucknell 12

Despite the loss, Wilkes played well against strong, division I foe, Bucknell.

It took a three-run double in the eighth to finally put the Bison in the lead to stay.

Someone woke up the Colonels batting order as Wilkes collected a total of 15 hits in the game, including doubles by Joe Folek, Frank Wanzor, Brian Gorski and Joe Rainelli.

Wilkes used five pitchers in the game and Thompson was tagged with the loss.

The Colonels will play three doubleheaders on their next four dates. They will face Scranton, away, and Susquehanna and Messiah at home. Wilkes will then travel to Moravian to take on the Greyhounds.

Trivia Time

Due to the overwhelming response to last week's trivia questions we have decided to make this a weekly feature.

Many of you submitted possible answers to last week's questions but, I'm sorry to say we didn't receive a single correct answer.

Here are the correct answers:

A) Sunny Jim Bottomley was sued by a fan who was struck by one of Bottomley's home runs. The fan claimed Bottomley swung "with the intention of creating a situation known as a homer." Bottomley responded by saying, "there was never any malice in any of my home runs, just good clean hits."

B) Germany Schaefer, in protest of the heavy rain and the umpire's insistence on not calling the game came to bat wearing a raincoat and carrying an umbrella.

Now for this week's questions.

A) Who was the first major leaguer to enlist for World War I?

B) Who was the last player to legally throw a spitball?

If you think you might know the answer to either of these questions please drop us a note at the Beacon office on the third floor of the SUB. Include your name. Once again, thanks for the tremendous response last week.
