Nixon Presents Check For $4-Million; Total Losses Estimated At $10-Million

by Janice Yarrish

"Operation Snapback" efforts reaped success earlier in the month with the arrival of President Richard M. Nixon on the Wilkes College campus and the presentation of a check in the amount of $4-million. President Nixon presented the check directly to President Francis J. Micheline, saying "this is one check that won't bounce, Dr. Mike!"

The check was called only a first installment, with $6-million more to arrive in the near future, covering the estimated loss of $10-million caused in June by the record flooding of the Susquehanna River.

"Operation Snapback" represents an all-out effort on the part of students and college personnel who responded to a plea for "manpower and elbow grease" from the college president in an effort to overcome what had at first appeared to be almost a fatal blow.

The name given to the project by a group of early arrivals to the campus cleanup effort was the result of a public plea by Dr. Micheline for volunteers to assist in removing the scars left by the flood.

The future growth of the college and the efforts to keep the institution at its present high level depended on financial grants from the federal agencies, alumni contributions, and other sources to cover an estimated $10-million in destruction.

The hardest hit areas on the campus were the library, Stark Science Hall and the Center for the Performing Arts.

The library, perhaps the hardest hit, had over $500,000 in book losses. Many of the books were irreplaceable, along with some of the records that represented many years of work by individuals in research.

Stark Hall, the college science center, was also hard hit, with close to $2,000,000 in spare electronic parts and other equipment lost.

The Center for the Performing Arts along with the music building sustained $1.5-million worth of damages. The auditorium was heavily damaged with water covering all but the top six rows of seats.

"Operation Snapback" was termed a major success when on July 5, some 10 days after the flood, summer day and evening classes resumed. The early return was a result of the cleanup and the fact that facilities above the first floors were unharmed.

Phase two of "Operation Snapback" began in August when paint buckets and brushes replaced shovels and payloaders. Most of the dormitories and classroom buildings stripped of the debris were in the process of drying out and awaiting painting crews.

Frank Carlucci, the President's special representative in Wilkes-Barre to coordinate the federal flood recovery operation, met with Dr. Micheline and toured the Wilkes College campus last month.

Carlucci said, "The damages to private institutions were quite extensive." There were 41 private institutions in the area hit by the flood.

Dr. Micheline never lost faith in the "Wilkes Spirit."

"The real guts of a college is in the students and faculty, not the bricks and the mortar. As long as we have those two ingredients, we will have a college."

A Valley United

The following letter was written by Dr. Eugene S. Farley, first president of Wilkes College, in the aftermath of the June 23 disaster and ran as a Letter to the Editor in the August 3 edition of the New York Times.

Dr. Farley watched Wilkes College grow from an offshoot of Bucknell University with one building to the 58-building complex it is today.

Dr. Farley came to Wilkes in the midst of a depression, helping the college grow following the flood of 1936, in the middle of a failing

While memories of water, mud and devastation are still fresh maybe each of us will join in planning for the re-birth of our Valley.

One hundred and fifty years ago the "Vale of Wyoming" was reputed to be one of the most beautiful spots in the East.

One hundred years ago our Valley was still beautiful but mining was slowly destroying its natural beauty.

Fifty years ago our Valley was noted for its labor strife and for the physical and psychological scars left by the mining industry.

Fifty days ago we were struggling to create a new and more attractive Valley and we were succeeding. Slowly but surely new jobs were being created, the general economy was improving and old eye-sores were being replaced by modern, attractively land-scaped buildings.

And then in a few hours we were inundated with flood waters and left with inches of mud and material damage that had to be seen to be believed.

But in the midst of this devastation neighbor helped neighbor and Civil Defense maintained order and provided leadership in the midst of muck, mud and devastation. In the midst of crisis we were united.

Now that we are slowly recovering may we maintain and enlarge this unity. May we unite to restore the beauty of our Valley while we strive to rebuild our homes and our industries. If we possess the vision, the will and the desire, we can, in cooperation with our neighbors, our state and our federal governments, restore the best of the past. And while so doing we can create a more beautiful and wholesome environment.

This is a dream but America was built by dreamers who were also doers and our Valley was being rebuilt by men and women of vision who also were doers. Can we not work to sustain this dream?

There are many agencies at work to provide the instruments for new growth. Let us work with them to build a new and better economy and a more beautiful community. It can be done if we envision it and possess the will to do it.

Ankle deep mud and water marks serve as reminders of the recent disaster at the gym.

Ceiling tiles, books, wall paper and mud merged into one in basement of the library.

The once picturesque Commons now resembles a pile of debris.

These two grand pianos were among the piles of debris constituting the $1.5 million in damages at the Dorothy Dickson Darte Music Building.

Mud and water damages in the Center for the Performing Arts totaled $1.5-million.

Chaos was all that remained at the post Office after muddy waters filled the basement of the New Men's Dorm.

Wilkes Faculty Won Plan Coffee Saturday

Wilkes Faculty Women will open their season of activities with a coffee Saturday at 10 a.m. in the lounge of Wilkes College's Center for the Performing Arts.

All Wilkes women who are members of the teaching faculty or faculty wives are invited to come as guests. Old members will have the opportunity to welcome approximately 18 new faculty women to Wilkes. Although a large percentage of the Wilkes faculty was severely hurt by the flood, Wilkes Faculty Women plan to continue their activities and to provide many service projects for the college.

One of the main projects of Wilkes Faculty Women is the offering of the Eleanor Coates Farley Scholarship to Wilkes women students. Mrs. Reed D. Achson, fund raising chairman, will have a number of items including stationary and napkins for sale at the coffee to support the scholarship.
