IN QUEST OF MEANING

President's Address to the Student Body — October, 1964

by Dr. Eugene S. Farley

EACH YEAR I find myself groping for thoughts and words that may have meaning to you. Each year I start and end this quest with misgivings for I am aware of the inadequacy of words, just as I am also aware of the influences that they exert upon our thoughts and actions. In spite of my growing doubts, I speak to you from a conviction that education and intelligence are required in ever-increasing portions if we are to resolve the dilemma that man has created for himself. By intelligence, he has broken the physical boundaries that in previous centuries hemmed him in. By breaking these physical barriers, he has created the possibility of a finer life for all mankind, but, unfortunately, the breaking of these barriers also jeopardizes his civilization. In these new conditions ignorance and prejudice threaten his survival. They will continue to threaten his future until he applies the same intelligence to breaking the man-made barriers that he has applied to breaking the natural barriers.

Confronted with these alternatives, is it not imperative that the masses of men break the barriers of custom, ignorance, hatred, fear, and prejudice which, not only divide men, but also pit man against man and group against group. As improved communications and growing interdependence are forced upon us by the advances of science and technology, the psychological barriers that separate us create increasing tensions. While science and technology bring men of all backgrounds into closer relationships, psychological forces push men away from one another. The tensions arising from such conflicting influences inevitably create doubt, fear, tension, and conflict.

Were we an ignorant and backward people, we would not recognize the nature of our dilemma. We have access, however, to psychological and sociological knowledge which can give us insight and understanding. They can do this, however, only if we use our minds and cultivate our spirits to translate the doubts and frustrations of our situation into constructive channels. If we accept the challenge of our current dilemma, we can hope for its resolution. If we fail to accept this challenge, we can expect catastrophe.

To some degree, the psychological dilemma that confronts us is beyond our small powers of resolution; but, to a greater degree, the resolution of this dilemma depends upon us. If we are to be persons of education and intelligence, we must not only recognize the nature of the challenge, we must meet it with constructive action.

IN THIS MODERN WORLD as men are forced into closer relations, the communication of ideas and thoughts becomes of ever-increasing importance. Therefore, it may be that the ability to express our ideas clearly and succinctly may be a key to our personal success and to the survival of our civilization. This communication may well depend upon the ability of men to understand one another's inner thoughts and deeper aspirations. Needless to say, such understanding is not possible where clear communication is not assured.

There are two aspects of communication: one is the ability to express one's self clearly; the other is the willingness and ability to comprehend the meaning of those who wish to communicate with us. Both of these capabilities—the ability to express a thought clearly, and the ability to grasp a thought—are products of education. Without either ability a person cannot consider himself educated. Because communication is a two-way process, education must cultivate mental receptivity and clarity of expression.

In spite of ever-increasing doubts as to my own capabilities to convey a message of meaning to you, I speak from a growing conviction that education and intelligence are the only hope that we have for resolving the conflicts and dilemmas that surround us. Years ago, following the First World War, two English writers stated our problem succinctly. H. G. Wells wrote that "Man is engaged in a race between education and disaster," and Somerset Maugham remarked that "Man has always found it easier to fight than to learn the multiplication table." Both of these men in the 1920's foresaw the problems that we now face. I wonder, however, if either of them foresaw the added compulsion that would be imposed upon us by the release of atomic power and by the impact of improved communications and transportation upon peoples of different cultures, different colors, different religions, and different nationalities.

IN THE PAST FORTY YEARS, science and technology have brought us closer together physically than anyone could have dreamed was possible. Most of the technological achievements that you take for granted have occurred within the past fifty years. In the 1920's, the first flight across the ocean was made. It took thirty-three and one half hours and attracted great attention. It seemed a miracle to those who listened for reports of the flight. About the same time, communication by radio became possible and not until the 1940's was television developed for practical use. In the 1920's, planes that traveled 120 to 150 miles an hour seemed to be superb. Today they look, in retrospect, like primitive and miniscule attempts by man to release himself from the surface of the earth. I can well remember visiting the Newark Airport in the early 1930's and observing the fabric-covered planes which then seemed to be so advanced and so tremendous. Today they would not even be used for flight training. They were possibly less intricate than the Piper Cub that some of you know today.

Today, as always, there is a desire on the part of some men to live as men have lived in the past. There is a desire to avoid the changes and uncertainties that are thrust upon us by acts of nature and of men. In the past, most great changes were thrust upon men by convulsions of nature. Today, the great changes that are thrust upon us are most frequently the product of men's minds. Although these man-made changes are tremendous, they are not yet as violent nor as widespread as the acts of nature. Man's control of nature increases steadily. In consequence, it now seems that he may ultimately have within his grasp an unrelievable control of the great forces of nature.

Man cannot hope to use these newly-acquired powers beneficially unless he first gains control of himself. To attain this control of self he must develop greater intelligence and understanding. To develop both intelligence and understanding, he must rely upon education.

TODAY YOU ARE SEEKING MORE EDUCATION. In this search, it is my abiding hope that you may so develop your minds that intelligence and wisdom will guide your lives and enable you to fully understand and resolve the many problems that lie before you. Only enlightened men of great purpose and integrity can hope to resolve the dilemma that has been created by man's increasing control of natural powers and by his parallel failure to understand and control the forces that exist within men. Whether we acknowledge it or not, science and technology change our world and we welcome the material changes and the advantages that they offer. Unfortunately, we simultaneously resist the psychological and spiritual adjustments that must accompany material change. We fail to recognize that unless man changes with his environment, the new environment that he is creating may destroy him.

For a few moments I wish to discuss with you the psychological problems resulting from this confrontation of material progress with intellectual and spiritual inertia. Failing to accept or even to recognize the need for new adjustments, men find themselves involved in uncertainty, turmoil, and conflict. These conflicts begin in the minds of individuals and manifest themselves in personal neuroticism and in group conflict. So long as these inner conflicts are unresolved, emotional and social disturbances are inevitable.

Wherever we look, we see evidence of both personal and social disturbance. It is apparent in our ideological conflicts; it shows itself in the clashes of nations; it is responsible, in some part, for the fighting in Korea, Vietnam, the Congo, and Cyprus; it is brought home to us by riots in New York and Rochester, in Birmingham and St. Augustine. All are manifestations of the dilemma resulting from our unwillingness, or inability, to adapt our patterns of thought, of custom, and of behavior to the new civilization that is emerging from the old.

Unfortunately, the ideological struggle of our times distracts attention from the true nature of the scientific revolution in which we are involved. Fascism threatened the existence of the free nations in the 1940's; thereafter Communism posed a greater threat. Our reaction to both has been motivated by fear and hatred rather than by conviction and intelligence. We have been so concerned by the threat of these opposing ideologies that we have offered blind opposition rather than an intelligent and humane alternative. We have failed to recognize the flexibility and dynamism of our own institutions and of the ideals upon which they are founded. Because of fear and hatred, we sometimes oppose Communism by adopting methods which strengthen it. Nazism was developed to oppose Communism; in reality, it probably strengthened it. There are many of us who suspect that Communism and Fascism strengthen one another by the violence of their reactions.

In human thought, as in physics, every action produces a comparable reaction. Perhaps someday we will discover that there is a law which governs human reactions. If so, it may well be this: "Like begets like; moderation begets moderation; extremism begets extremism; trust begets trust; fear begets fear," and so on down the line through all of the emotions that govern human relations.

The purpose of this discussion is to suggest that the way to fight either Communism or Fascism is to make our own system more effective and more productive. If we believe in our system we should have faith that in strengthening it we meet the challenge of both Communism and Fascism. The answer to their challenge will never be given in terms of military might. When we are concerned with human aspirations and human thoughts, power alone offers no answer. Neither aspirations nor thoughts can be restrained by military might. They may be repressed for a decade or a century, but ultimately the aspirations of men break forth and institutions are created which enable men to satisfy their hopes and aspirations.

There is always some reluctance to acknowledge the true nature of the conflicts that confront us. This hesitation results from the sacredness of some of our institutions and the desire to adhere to accustomed patterns of thought. We have sometimes mistaken condemnation of others as the sole measure of personal loyalty. We seem afraid to admit that our opponent is ever right and that we are sometimes wrong. If we are to be intelligently loyal to our nation and our society, we must concern ourselves with weaknesses that need correction and must maintain the strengths that we possess. We need to recognize that our country for several centuries offered hope to the people of many nations. Millions, inspired by this hope, came to our shores. Today we no longer offer so much hope to the peoples of the world; instead we are envied and feared, and sometimes we are respected. Our problem, in the midst of international tension, ideological conflict, and scientific revolution, is to renew the vitality of our ideals and our institutions. In the turbulent times of the twentieth century we cannot remain static; we must move ahead if our nation is to maintain its vigor and its influence throughout the world. Devotion to our nation and to the aspirations of all people requires not the maintenance of a static position; it calls for a vigorous attack upon our own problems and a rededication to our greatest ideals.

RELIGION IS ANOTHER MATTER that we sometimes hesitate to consider for fear that we may re-awaken the religious conflict and bigotry of past centuries. We know that religious conflict and bigotry still exist, but in many areas of the world these conflicts have been ameliorated by man's recognition that people of other religious groups are groping, as are we, for an understanding of man's relation to his Creator, to the world, and to the universe. Fortunately, an increasing number of men feel that if religion concerns itself with spirit rather than with form, it can create trust and understanding. Where religious belief is tempered with sympathy and concern for one's fellow, religion may become the greatest force for unity and understanding.

We find it difficult to understand the thinking of those within our own culture who adhere to values and practices that differ from our own. We must, therefore, recognize the greater difficulty that confronts persons of differing cultures when they strive to communicate with one another. Our comprehension of this problem is further accentuated by the difficulties that we encounter as we strive to adapt ourselves to the new culture we are creating. Until we can adapt to our own changing culture, and until we resolve the doubts and conflicts that exist within us, how can we hope to resolve the doubts and conflicts of the emerging peoples. By reducing the barriers of space, science and technology have brought together men of different cultures. Neither science nor technology, however, enables men of different cultures to communicate and to understand one another. Although cultures and bias may separate groups and nations, all men have common aspirations. It is possible that the recognition and acceptance of these common aspirations may provide a bridge to understanding. All men have much in common; and, in recent years, the aspirations of the freest and most advanced peoples of the world have become the aspirations of all who have caught a glimpse of the material prosperity of the free peoples.

It is understandable that any awareness of the benefits and privileges of an advanced civilization will create desire in the minds of those who have just learned of these advantages. It is equally understandable that those who enjoy the advantages of an advanced civilization may have difficulty in comprehending the gropings and yearnings of the under-privileged peoples of the world. The advanced peoples are aware of the centuries of struggle, sacrifice, and effort that have created the political and economic institutions upon which their present welfare is based. They may sympathize with the desires of the disadvantaged, but they do not comprehend how these less fortunate people can gain in one life span the well-being that the more advanced peoples have gained through centuries of groping.

It is difficult for the advanced people to bridge the cultural gap of centuries. It is impossible, however, for the disadvantaged to bridge this gap without the help of the more fortunate. If we are to maintain any stability and are to continue the cultural evolution of the past, those who enjoy the advantages of an established social order must recognize and acknowledge the tremendous psychological and cultural adjustments that now confront the backward people. Possibly we can be helped in this by first recognizing the psychological adjustments that we must make if we are to move successfully from the static and known past into the changing and unknown future. If we are unsettled and disturbed by the demands of our changing society, can we not recognize and sympathize with the greater psychological and cultural adjustments that are required of less-advanced peoples as they move into the mainstream of the twentieth century?

ALTHOUGH WE HAVE SOME AWARENESS of the material changes that science and technology offer us, we are much less aware of the psychological, social, and spiritual changes that must accompany them. Because of our tendency to adhere to the prejudices, the mores, the thoughts, the values, and the standards of the past, we frequently fail to make the personal and group changes that are required if man is to keep abreast of the material changes in his environment. As educated persons, one of our responsibilities is to reduce the lag between scientific and cultural progress so that uncertainty and misunderstanding may not destroy our civilization. Let each of us assume some responsibility for reducing the gap that must always exist between men of differing cultures.

The magnitude of this cultural gap will vary from decades to millenniums. Just ten years ago I visited the Near East where men were then living and thinking as they had lived for thousands of years. They used the same tools and methods of production and lived as had their forebears 2,000 years ago. They were isolated from the great developments that were taking place throughout the Western world, but at the same time, they were caught in the nationalistic and ideological struggles of our time. Because of this involvement these people have in the past decade made new contacts with both the East and the West. In consequence, they now grasp for the material advantages offered by both. Unfortunately, they fail to recognize the spiritual and intellectual foundations upon which our material progress has been based. They have not yet recognized that only where there is a social conscience do men help one another, and only where men help one another are the advantages of education and science passed on from one generation to another. You and I take education so much for granted that we fail to recognize that formal education was confined to the elite until men recognized that free political and economic institutions required an intelligent and informed citizenry.

In the first stages of the industrial revolution, men, women, and children were horribly exploited. Children worked in factories before they reached their teens. They worked long hours and were given less consideration than were the machines with which they worked. About 1875 one New England manufacturer, when queried regarding his responsibility to his workers, replied, "I treat my employees as I treat my machines. When they are worn out, I abandon them."

It was in the midst of this type of social thinking that Communism came into being. Marx and Engels recognized the tragic results of human exploitation, and they dreamed of a system that would eliminate selfishness and greed. Like all Utopian thinkers, they conceived a system that was in contrast to that which existed at the time. Like all Utopians they failed to recognize that human nature continues to function in all social, economic, and political systems. They did not recognize that the most compelling force in improving human nature is social conscience, a desire to help one's neighbors.

Although little evidence of social conscience was revealed by the creators of the industrial revolution, this conscience was always implicit in the two great religions of the West — Christianity and Judaism. Although submerged by selfishness and greed this latent conscience became a growing force in the lives of individuals and in the nature of our society. Because of the growth of conscience, acts of cruelty which were accepted in the past are looked upon with abhorrence today. Buchenwald is a part of our times but so is our abhorrence of it. The Marshall Plan, which enabled Europe to recover, is also a part of our times even though we sometimes doubt the effectiveness of our sharing. If we contrast the spirit of Buchenwald with the spirit of the Marshall Plan we can surely find reason for hope. Although social conscience has never been adequate, it has become an increasing force during the past century. It has combined with science and technology to give a new character and a new sense of obligation to Western civilization. In a sense, the great problems that now confront us are problems of conscience. Without conscience we would recognize neither injustice nor inequity.

Our conscience no longer allows us to blind ourselves to the needs of others. Our self-interest convinces us that it is better for each member of our society to be self-sustaining. So it is that we develop training programs which are designed to give each person an opportunity to prepare himself for a productive place in our modern economy. An enlightened self-interest has become a vital force in these "changing times."

The history of the past century and a half indicates that countries which know freedom, which offer opportunity for economic development, and which are guided by social conscience are best able to progress. It is no accident that the free nations of the world believing in pluralism of approach and pluralism of opportunity have offered men the greatest material well-being they have ever known. This is a by-product of social responsibility and freedom of opportunity.

SO FAR I have not discussed our most essential concern. This is you. Without your intelligence, your understanding, your conviction, and your dedication the free institutions of the world will disappear. Only where men are concerned, courageous, and informed can we hope to maintain a pluralistic society based upon respect for those who differ from us.

Respect for those who differ from us is possibly a key to the human problems that confront us. Although men of different cultures and origins can perhaps never fully understand one another, such complete understanding may not be needed if men will only respect one another regardless of their differences. It is possible to maintain friendly relations with individuals who differ from you provided you show respect for them and for their differences. One idea that may help is the knowledge that as men differ from you, in exactly the same degree do you differ from them. Therefore, if you want them to accept and respect your convictions, you must respect their convictions. Where there is mutual respect, differences are not likely to lead to unnecessary conflict.

In this day of flux we do not need an education which indoctrinates. Our need is for an education which exposes your minds to the ideas, customs, and ideals of various cultures. Only a broad-ranging, versatile mind can understand the cause and nature of cultural differences. Only through a greater understanding of the frustrations of millions of people can we hope to escape continuing conflict at home and abroad.

As intelligence and education have combined to break the physical barriers that have kept us apart, so do education and intelligence offer the only hope of reducing the psychological barriers that prevent understanding and cooperation in our ever-shrinking world.

We must accept the fact that the basic nature of all men is the same. Cultural, national, religious, political, and economic differences may tend to separate us; but, basically, the hopes and aspirations of men are the same. Our task is to reduce conflict and misunderstanding by recognizing these common aspirations and by respecting those who differ from us.

It is the responsibility of education to prepare you for this task. It is your responsibility to educate yourself.

Perhaps all that I have wished to say is said much more simply on a card that has been given to all members of Kiwanis International. In simple and effective words this message is given:

In this sick world of violence, selfishness, and apathy, I hereby commit myself, with God's help, to do my best to be a part of the cure rather than the disease.

THE THEATER

by Alfred S. Groh, '41

At 10:30 a.m. on August 11, ground was broken for the College's long-awaited Center for Performing Arts. Bulldozers and crews, busy preparing for actual construction, paused during the brief ceremonies while Dr. Farley and the chairman of the board of trustees, Attorney Charles B. Waller, turned the first spades of earth.

The building is expected to be ready for operation in September 1965.

The land — facing the south end of the river common at the corner of South River, West South and West River Streets — was donated to Wilkes College in 1947 by the Wyoming Valley Society of Arts and Sciences. Under the chairmanship of the late Gilbert S. McClintock, the trustees initiated the concept of the Center and the growth of its cultural functions. The Center became a reality when the College received an initial contribution of $480,000 from donors interested in the creative and performing arts.

Work at the site has been helped by the best weather conditions for construction in the last seventeen years. To date, excavation is complete, concrete forms are poured, footings are in place, the stage and workshop area are completely enclosed, sewer lines and water pipes are laid.

When completed, the Center will overlook the riverbank with a view toward the Market Street Bridge and Kirby Park. The building will contain an upper lobby and plaza deck, exhibition gallery, workshop, as well as costume, makeup, and storage facilities, a Green Room, offices, and rehearsal halls. The 500-seat theater (the intimate tradition of Chase Theater) will use a flexible proscenium stage, with a trap area and a moveable fore-stage and orchestra pit.

The building will be entirely air conditioned. Century Lighting Company is designing a 10-scene preset electronic lighting control system, which will be operated from a booth at the rear of the auditorium. A portable stage manager's control console, located backstage, is being prepared according to specifications by Donald Oenslager, noted Broadway stage designer and theater consultant. Chandeliers, carpets, tiles, and other special furnishings are being selected by Leigh Allen, New York interior designer.

No building on campus has been as eagerly awaited by the community or the alumni. Continued encouragement over the years has given us the opportunity "to keep in our souls images of magnificence."

The Wilkes College Center for Performing Arts is a public testament to the private conscience, an expression of the creative imagination in its constant quest for truth.

17TH Annual HOME- coming

The 17th Annual Homecoming of Wilkes College alumni was held on October 16 and 17. Participating in some or all of the Homecoming festivities were approximately 500-600 alumni. Under the general chairmanship of Ronald Tremayne, '58, and various alumni committees, Homecoming Weekend "kicked-off" with the annual Warm-up Party on Friday evening in the Ballroom of Genetti's Hotel. Co-Chairmen of the Warm-up Party were Elmo Clemente, '42, and J. Glenn Gooch, '58. Wilkes faculty members, alumni and guests from out-of-town chapter areas filled the Ballroom. The social informality of the evening was highlighted by renewing friendships, discussing careers, and much reminiscing.

Prior to the Warm-up Party, a committee of alumni judges, headed by Nancy Davies Andreeko, Barbara Phillips Swaback, and James Swaback completed a review of all Homecoming displays in preparation for the awards presentation the following day.

Weckesser Hall, women's dormitory, won two trophies — one for the best over-all display, the other for the best display of women's dormitories. Denison Hall, men's dormitory, won the trophy in its area, and the Education Club captured the award in the campus organization's category.

On Saturday, Homecoming activities got off to an early start with the Wilkes-Lycoming soccer game at 10:30 a.m. Many alumni watched the Wilkes Colonels lose to the Lycoming Warriors by a 4-2 score.

At 2:00 p.m. several thousand alumni, friends and students of the College witnessed the Wilkes-Ursinus football game. A stunning victory by a 42-13 score gave the Colonel "rooters" just what the Homecoming occasion required. Prior to the game, the student car caravan arrived at the Athletic Field with the Homecoming Queen and her Court. During the half-time, Miss Cathy DeAngelis, a biology major, was crowned Homecoming Queen of 1964 by Dr. Eugene S. Farley. Homecoming Princesses were Mrs. Jo Signorelli Russin, an elementary education major, and Miss Mary Russin, a biology major. Gifts were presented the Queen and the Princesses by the Alumni Association, the Student Government, the Beacon, and by the Sophomore, Junior and Senior classes.

The North Room of the new Holiday Inn Motel was the scene of the class reunion dinners on Saturday evening. Dr. Robert B. Morris, '59, presided as master of ceremonies. Guests of honor were Dr. and Mrs. Eugene Farley and Dr. and Mrs. Francis Micheline. Alumni from the classes of '39, '44, '49, '54 and '59 heard Dr. Farley discuss the recent developments of the College. Dr. Farley cited the ever-important need for continuing and growing alumni support of the College.

Later in the evening, hundreds of alumni gathered at the Host Motel for the Annual Homecoming Dance, the concluding social event of the weekend.

Election of officers took place over the festivity-filled weekend. Elected to guide the Alumni Association for the following year were: Leonard Mulcahy, '58, Accountant, Hoskins & Sells, Inc., President; Eugene Roth, '57, Attorney, Rosenn, Jenkins & Greenwald law firm, vice-president; George Murdock, '60, Chemist, House of Savoy, Inc., Treasurer; and Anita Janerich, '52, Pennsylvania Department of Public Assistance, Secretary.

WILKES COLLEGE
WILKES-BARRE
PENNSYLVANIA 18768
November, 1964

Dear Fellow Alumni:

As Chairman of the 1964 Annual Alumni Campaign and on behalf of Wilkes College, I would like to express appreciation and sincere thanks to all Wilkes alumni who participated in the recent scholarship campaign.

In particular, I desire to call attention to the outstanding participation of the Class of 1964 in establishing the Class of 1964 Fund.

The conclusion of the 1964 Alumni Campaign resulted in a significant increase of alumni participation and financial support for Wilkes College.

The 1962 Campaign saw 14.7% or 596 alumni participating; total support that year was $9,511.74. The 1963 Campaign saw 20.9% or 739 alumni participating; total support that year was $14,589.76.

In contrast, the 1964 Campaign saw 31.8% or 1,214 alumni participating; total support this year is $24,745.00.

The 1964 Campaign surpassed last year's results with an alumni increase of 10.9% in participation and $10,155.24 in total amount pledged. This demonstration of ever-increasing support makes us confident that even more alumni of Wilkes will participate in next year's campaign.

Once again, on behalf of our College, I extend my heartfelt thanks.

Sincerely,

Eugene Roth

The Money Behind Our Colleges

ARE AMERICA'S colleges and universities in good financial health—or bad?

Are they pricing themselves out of many students' reach? Or can—and should—students and their parents carry a greater share of the cost of higher education?

Can state and local governments appropriate more money for higher education? Or is there a danger that taxpayers may "revolt"?

Does the federal government—now the third-largest provider of funds to higher education—pose a threat to the freedom of our colleges and universities? Or is the "threat" groundless, and should higher education seek even greater federal support?

Can private donors—business corporations, religious denominations, foundations, alumni, and alumnae—increase their gifts to colleges and universities as greatly as some authorities say is necessary? Or has private philanthropy gone about as far as it can go?

There is no set of "right" answers to such questions. College and university financing is complicated, confusing, and often controversial, and even the administrators of the nation's institutions of higher learning are not of one mind as to what the best answers are.

One thing is certain: financing higher education is not a subject for "insiders," alone. Everybody has a stake in it.

TUITION continued

too burdensome?

tory rooms, brought the nation's public institutions of higher education a total of $415 million—one-tenth of their entire current-fund income.

By comparison:

In private universities, the median charge was $1,038.

In private liberal arts colleges, it was $751.

In private teachers colleges, it was $575.

In private junior colleges, it was $502.

In 1961-62, such student payments brought the private colleges and universities a total of $1.1 billion—more than one-third of their entire current-fund income.

From all students, in all types of institution, America's colleges and universities thus collected a total of $1.5 billion in tuition and other educational fees.

NO NATION puts more stock in maximum college attendance by its youth than does the United States," says an American report to an international committee. "Yet no nation expects those receiving higher education to pay a greater share of its cost."

The leaders of both private and public colleges and universities are worried by this paradox.

Private-institution leaders are worried because they have no desire to see their campuses closed to all but the sons and daughters of well-to-do families. But, in effect, this is what may happen if students must continue to be charged more than a third of the costs of providing higher education—costs that seem to be eternally on the rise. (Since one-third is the average for all private colleges and universities, the students' share of costs is lower in some private colleges and universities, considerably higher in others.)

Public-institution leaders are worried because, in the rise of tuition and other student fees, they see the eventual collapse of a cherished American dream: equal educational opportunity for all. Making students pay a greater part of the cost of public higher education is no mere theoretical threat; it is already taking place, on a broad scale. Last year, half of the state universities and land-grant institutions surveyed by the federal government reported that, in the previous 12 months, they had had to increase the tuition and fees charged to home-state students. More than half had raised their charges to students who came from other states.

CAN THE RISE in tuition rates be stopped—at either public or private colleges and universities?

A few vocal critics think it should not be; that tuition should, in fact, go up. Large numbers of students can afford considerably more than they are now paying, the critics say.

"Just look at the student parking lots. You and I are helping to pay for those kids' cars with our taxes," one campus visitor said last fall. Asked an editorial in a Tulsa newspaper:

"Why should taxpayers, most of whom have not had the advantage of college education, continue to subsidize students in state-supported universities who have enrolled, generally, for the frank purpose of eventually earning more than the average citizen?"

An editor in Omaha had similar questions:

"Why shouldn't tuition cover more of the rising costs? And why shouldn't young people be willing to pay higher tuition fees, and if necessary borrow the money against their expected earnings? And why shouldn't tuition charges have a direct relationship to the prospective earning power—less in the case of the poorer-paid professions and more in the case of those which are most remunerative?"

Such questions, or arguments-in-the-form-of-questions, miss the main point of tax-supported higher education, its supporters say.

"The primary beneficiary of higher education is society," says a joint statement of the State Universities Association and the Association of State Universities and Land-Grant Colleges.

"The process of making students pay an increasing proportion of the costs of higher education will, if continued, be disastrous to American society and to American national strength.

"It is based on the theory that higher education benefits only the individual and that he should therefore pay immediately and directly for its cost—through borrowing if necessary. . . .

"This is a false theory. . . . It is true that great economic and other benefits do accrue to the individual, and it is the responsibility of the individual to help pay for the education of others on this account—through taxation and through voluntary support of colleges and universities, in accordance with the benefits received. But even from the narrowest of economic standpoints, a general responsibility rests on society to finance higher education. The businessman who has things to sell is a beneficiary, whether he attends college or not, whether his children do or not. . . ."

Says a university president: "I am worried, as are most educators, about the possibility that we will price ourselves out of the market."

For private colleges—already forced to charge for a large part of the cost of providing higher education—the problem is particularly acute. As costs continue to rise, where will private colleges get the income to meet them, if not from tuition?

After studying 100 projections of their budgets by private liberal arts colleges, Sidney G. Tickton, of the Fund for the Advancement of Education, flatly predicted:

"Tuition will be much higher ten years hence."

Already, Mr. Tickton pointed out, tuition at many private colleges is beyond the reach of large numbers of students, and scholarship aid isn't large enough to help. "Private colleges are beginning to realize that they haven't been taking many impecunious students in recent years. The figures show that they can be expected to take an even smaller proportion in the future.

Or should students
carry a heavier
share of the costs?

39.7% of their income
comes from the states.

"The facts are indisputable. Private colleges may not like to admit this or think of themselves as educators of only the well-heeled, but the signs are that they aren't likely to be able to do very much about it in the decade ahead."

What is the outlook at public institutions? Members of the Association of State Colleges and Universities were recently asked to make some predictions on this point. The consensus:

They expect the tuition and fees charged to their home-state students to rise from a median of $200 in 1962-63 to $230, five years later. In the previous five years, the median tuition had increased from $150 to $200. Thus the rising-tuition trend would not be stopped, they felt—but it would be slowed.

THE ONLY alternative to higher tuition, whether at public or private institutions, is increased income from other sources—taxes, gifts, grants. If costs continue to increase, such income will have to increase not merely in proportion, but at a faster rate—if student charges are to be held at their present levels.

What are the prospects for these other sources of income? See the pages that follow.

COLLEGES and universities depend upon many sources for their financial support. But one source towers high above all the rest: the American taxpayer.

The taxpayer provides funds for higher education through all levels of government—federal, state, and local.

Together, in the most recent year reported, governments supplied 44.4 per cent of the current-fund income of all U.S. colleges and universities—a grand total of $3.2 billion.

This was more than twice as much as all college and university students paid in tuition fees. It was nearly seven times the total of all private gifts and grants.

By far the largest sums for educational purposes came from state and local governments: $1.9 billion, altogether. (Although the federal government's over-all expenditures on college and university campuses were large—nearly $1.4 billion—all but $262 million was earmarked for research.)

STATES HAVE HAD a financial interest in higher education since the nation's founding. (Even before independence, Harvard and other colonial colleges had received government support.) The first state university, the University of Georgia, was chartered in 1785. As settlers moved west, each new state received two townships of land from the federal government, to support an institution of higher education.

But the true flourishing of publicly supported higher education came after the Civil War. State universities grew. Land-grant colleges were founded, fostered by the Morrill Act of 1862. Much later, local governments entered the picture on a large scale, particularly in the junior-college field.

Today, the U.S. system of publicly supported colleges and universities is, however one measures it, the world's greatest. It comprises 743 institutions (345 local, 386 state, 12 federal), compared with a total of 1,357 institutions that are privately controlled.

Enrollments in the public colleges and universities are awesome, and certain to become more so.

As recently as 1950, half of all college and university students attended private institutions. No longer—and probably never again. Last fall, the public colleges and universities enrolled 60 per cent—one million more students than did the private institutions. And, as more and more young Americans go to college in the years ahead, both the number and the proportion attending publicly controlled institutions will soar.

By 1970, according to one expert projection, there will be 7 million college and university students. Public institutions will enroll 67 per cent of them.

By 1980, there will be 10 million students. Public institutions will enroll 75 per cent of them.

THE FINANCIAL implications of such enrollments are enormous. Will state and local governments be able to cope with them?

In the latest year for which figures have been tabulated, the current-fund income of the nation's public colleges and universities was $4.1 billion. Of this total, state and local governments supplied more than $1.8 billion, or 44 per cent. To this must be added $790 million in capital outlays for higher education, including $613 million for new construction.

In the fast-moving world of public-college and university financing, such heady figures are already obsolete. At present, reports the Committee for Economic Development, expenditures for higher education are the fastest-growing item of state and local-government financing. Between 1962 and 1968, while expenditures for all state and local-government activities will increase by about 50 per cent, expenditures for higher education will increase 120 per cent. In 1962, such expenditures represented 9.5 per cent of state and local tax income; in 1968, they will take 12.3 per cent.

Professor M.M. Chambers, of the University of Michigan, has totted up each state's tax-fund appropriations to colleges and universities (see list, next page). He cautions readers not to leap to interstate comparisons; there are too many differences between the practices of the 50 states to make such an exercise valid. But the differences do not obscure the fact that, between fiscal year 1961 and fiscal 1963, all states except Alabama and Montana increased their tax-fund appropriations to higher education. The average was a whopping 24.5 per cent.

Can states continue to increase appropriations? No one answer will serve from coast to coast.

Poor states will have a particularly difficult problem. The Southern Regional Education Board, in a recent report, told why:

"Generally, the states which have the greatest potential demand for higher education are the states which have the fewest resources to meet the demand. Rural states like Alabama, Arkansas, Mississippi, and South Carolina have large numbers of college-age young people and relatively small per-capita income levels." Such states, the report concluded, can achieve educational excellence only if they use a larger proportion of their resources than does the nation as a whole.

A leading Western educator summed up his state's problem as follows:

"Our largest age groups, right now, are old people and youngsters approaching college age. Both groups depend heavily upon the producing, taxpaying members of our economy. The elderly demand state-financed welfare; the young demand state-financed education.

"At present, however, the producing part of our economy is composed largely of 'depression babies'—a comparatively small group. For the next few years, their per-capita tax burden will be pretty heavy, and it may be hard to get them to accept any big increases."

But the alternatives to more tax money for public colleges and universities—higher tuition rates, the turning away of good students—may be even less acceptable to many taxpayers. Such is the hope of those who believe in low-cost, public higher education.

EVERY projection of future needs shows that state and local governments must increase their appropriations vastly, if the people's demands for higher education are to be met. The capacity of a government to make such increases, as a California study has pointed out, depends on three basic elements:

- 1) The size of the "stream of income" from which the support for higher education must be drawn;
 - 2) The efficiency and effectiveness of the tax system; and
 - 3) The will of the people to devote enough money to the purpose.
- Of these elements, the third is the hardest to analyze, in economic terms. It may well be the most crucial.

Here is why:

In their need for increased state and local funds, colleges and universities will be in competition with growing needs for highways, urban renewal, and all the other services that citizens demand of their governments. How the available tax funds will be allocated will depend, in large measure, on how the people rank their demands, and how insistently they make the demands known.

"No one should know better than our alumni the importance of having society invest its money and faith in the education of its young people," Allan W. Ostar, director of the Office of Institutional Research, said recently. "Yet all too often we find alumni of state universities who are not willing to provide the same opportunity to future generations that they enjoyed. Our alumni should be leading the fight for adequate tax support of our public colleges and universities.

"If they don't, who will?"

TO SOME Americans, the growth of state-supported higher education, compared with that of the private colleges and universities, has been disturbing for other reasons than its effects upon the tax rate.

One cause of their concern is a fear that government dollars inevitably will be accompanied by a dangerous sort of government control. The fabric of higher education, they point out, is laced with controversy, new ideas, and challenges to all forms of the status quo. Faculty members, to be effective teachers and researchers, must be free of reprisal or fears of reprisal. Students must be encouraged to experiment, to question, to disagree.

The best safeguard, say those who have studied the question, is legal autonomy for state-supported higher education: independent boards of regents or trustees, positive protections against interference by state agencies, post-audits of accounts but no line-by-line political control over budget proposals—the latter being a device by which a legislature might be able to cut the salary of an "offensive" professor or stifle another's research. Several state constitutions already guarantee such autonomy to state universities. But in some other states, college and university administrators must be as adept at politicking as at educating, if their institutions are to thrive.

Another concern has been voiced by many citizens. What will be the effects upon the country's private colleges, they ask, if the public-higher-education establishment continues to expand at its present rate? With state-financed institutions handling more and more students—and, generally, charging far lower tuition fees than the private institutions can afford—how can the small private colleges hope to survive?

President Robert D. Calkins, of the Brookings Institution, has said:

"Thus far, no promising alternative to an increased reliance on public institutions and public support has appeared as a means of dealing with the expanding demand for education. The trend may be checked, but there is nothing in sight to reverse it. . . .

"Many weak private institutions may have to face a choice between insolvency, mediocrity, or qualifying as public institutions. But enlarged opportunities for many private and public institutions will exist, often through cooperation. . . . By pooling resources, all may be strengthened. . . . In view of the recent support the liberal arts colleges have elicited, the more enterprising ones, at least, have an undisputed role for future service."

18.9 per cent from Washington

I SEEM TO SPEND half my life on the jets between here and Washington," said an official of a private university on the West Coast, not long ago.

"We've decided to man a Washington office, full time," said the spokesman for a state university, a few miles away.

For one in 20 U.S. institutions of higher education, the federal government in recent years has become one of the biggest facts of financial life. For some it is the biggest. "The not-so-jolly long-green giant," one man calls it.

Washington is no newcomer to the campus scene. The difference, today, is one of scale. Currently the federal government spends between $1 billion and $2 billion a year at colleges and universities. So vast are the expenditures, and so diverse are the government channels through which they flow to the campuses, that a precise figure is impossible to come by. The U.S. Office of Education's latest estimate, covering fiscal 1962, is that Washington was the source of $1.389 billion—or nearly 19 per cent—of higher education's total current-fund income.

"It may readily be seen," said Congresswoman Edith Green of Oregon, in a report last year to the House Committee on Education and Labor, "that the question is not whether there shall be federal aid to education."

Federal aid exists. It is big and is growing.

THE word aid, however, is misleading. Most of the federal government's expenditures in higher education—more than four and a half times as much as for all other purposes combined—are for research that the government needs. Thus, in a sense, the government is the purchaser of a commodity; the universities, like any other producer with whom the government does business, supply that commodity. The relationship is one of quid pro quo.

Congresswoman Green is quick to acknowledge this fact:

"What has not been . . . clear is the dependency of the federal government on the educational system. The government relies upon the universities to do those things which cannot be done by government personnel in government facilities.

"It turns to the universities to conduct basic research in the fields of agriculture, defense, medicine, public health, and the conquest of space, and even for managing and staffing of many governmental research laboratories.

"It relies on university faculty to judge the merits of proposed research.

"It turns to them for the management and direction of its foreign aid programs in underdeveloped areas of the world.

PRIVATE INSTITUTIONS:
19.1% of their income
comes from Washington.

PUBLIC INSTITUTIONS:
18.6% of their income
comes from Washington.

"It relies on them for training, in every conceivable field, of government personnel—both military and civilian."

THE FULL RANGE of federal-government relationships with U.S. higher education can only be suggested in the scope of this report. Here are some examples:

Land-grant colleges had their origins in the Morrill Land Grant College Act of 1862, when the federal government granted public lands to the states for the support of colleges "to teach such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and the mechanic arts," but not excluding science and classics. Today there are 68 such institutions. In fiscal 1962, the federal government distributed $10.7 million in land-grant funds.

The armed forces operate officers training programs in the colleges and universities—their largest source of junior officers.

Student loans, under the National Defense Education Act, are the major form of federal assistance to undergraduate students. They are administered by 1,534 participating colleges and universities, which select recipients on the basis of need and collect the loan repayments. In fiscal 1962, more than 170,000 undergraduates and nearly 15,000 graduate students borrowed $90 million in this way.

"The success of the federal loan program," says the president of a college for women, "is one of the most significant indexes of the important place the government has in financing private as well as public educational institutions. The women's colleges, by the way, used to scoff at the loan program. 'Who would marry a girl with a debt?' people asked. 'A girl's dowry shouldn't be a mortgage,' they said. But now more than 25 per cent of our girls have government loans, and they don't seem at all perturbed."

Fellowship grants to graduate students, mostly for advanced work in science or engineering, supported more than 35,000 persons in fiscal 1962. Cost to the government: nearly $104 million. In addition, around 20,000 graduate students served as paid assistants on government-sponsored university research projects.

Dormitory loans through the college housing program of the Housing and Home Finance Agency have played a major role in enabling colleges and universities to build enough dormitories, dining halls, student unions, and health facilities for their burgeoning enrollments. Between 1951 and 1961, loans totaling more than $1.5 billion were approved. Informed observers believe this program finances from 35 to 45 per cent of the total current construction of such facilities.

Grants for research facilities and equipment totaled $98.5 million in fiscal 1962, the great bulk of which went to universities conducting scientific research. The National Science Foundation, the National Institutes of Health, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, and the Atomic Energy Commission are the principal sources of such grants. A Department of Defense program enables institutions to build facilities and write off the cost.

To help finance new classrooms, libraries, and laboratories, Congress last year passed a $1.195 billion college aid program and, said President

Johnson, thus was "on its way to doing more for education than any since the land-grant college bill was passed 100 years ago."

Support for medical education through loans to students and funds for construction was authorized by Congress last fall, when it passed a $236 million program.

To strengthen the curriculum in various ways, federal agencies spent approximately $9.2 million in fiscal 1962. Samples: A $2 million National Science Foundation program to improve the content of science courses; a $2 million Office of Education program to help colleges and universities develop, on a matching-fund basis, language and area-study centers; a $2 million Public Health Service program to expand, create, and improve graduate work in public health.

Support for international programs involving U.S. colleges and universities came from several federal sources. Examples: Funds spent by the Peace Corps for training and research totaled more than $7 million. The Agency for International Development employed some 70 institutions to administer its projects overseas, at a cost of about $26 million. The State Department paid nearly $6 million to support more than 2,500 foreign students on U.S. campuses, and an additional $1.5 million to support more than 700 foreign professors.

BUT the greatest federal influence, on many U.S. campuses, comes through the government's expenditures for research.

As one would expect, most of such expenditures are made at universities, rather than at colleges (which, with some exceptions, conduct little research).

In the 1963 Godkin Lectures at Harvard, the University of California's President Clark Kerr called the federal government's support of research, starting in World War II, one of the "two great impacts [which], beyond all other forces, have molded the modern American university system and made it distinctive." (The other great impact: the land-grant college movement.)

At the institutions where they are concentrated, federal research funds have had marked effects. A self-study by Harvard, for example, revealed that 90 per cent of the research expenditures in the university's physics department were paid for by the federal government; 67 per cent in the chemistry department; and 95 per cent in the division of engineering and applied physics.

IS THIS government-dollar dominance in many universities' research budgets a healthy development?

After analyzing the role of the federal government on their campuses, a group of universities reporting to the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching agreed that "the effects [of government expenditures for campus-based research projects] have, on balance, been salutary."

Said the report of one institution:

"The opportunity to make expenditures of this size has permitted a research effort far superior to anything that could have been done without recourse to government sponsors. . . .

"Any university that declined to participate in the growth of sponsored research would have had to pay a high price in terms of the quality of its faculty in the science and engineering areas. . . ."

However, the university-government relationship is not without its irritations.

One of the most irksome, say many institutions, is the government's failure to reimburse them fully for the "indirect costs" they incur in connection with federally sponsored research—costs of administration, of libraries, of operating and maintaining their physical plant. If the government fails to cover such costs, the universities must—often by drawing upon funds that might otherwise be spent in strengthening areas that are not favored with large amounts of federal support, e.g., the humanities.

Some see another problem: faculty members may be attracted to certain research areas simply because federal money is plentiful there. "This . . . may tend to channel their efforts away from other important research and . . . from their teaching and public-service responsibilities," one university study said.

The government's emphasis upon science, health, and engineering, some persons believe, is another drawback to the federal research expenditures. "Between departments, a form of imbalance may result," said a recent critique. "The science departments and their research may grow and prosper. The departments of the humanities and social sciences may continue, at best, to maintain their status quo."

"There needs to be a National Science Foundation for the humanities," says the chief academic officer of a Southern university which gets approximately 20 per cent of its annual budget from federal grants.

"Certainly government research programs create imbalances within departments and between departments," said the spokesman for a leading Catholic institution, "but so do many other influences at work within a university. . . . Imbalances must be lived with and made the most of, if a level of uniform mediocrity is not to prevail."

THE CONCENTRATION of federal funds in a few institutions—usually the institutions which already are financially and educationally strong—makes sense from the standpoint of the quid pro quo philosophy that motivates the expenditure of most government funds. The strong research-oriented universities, obviously, can deliver the commodity the government wants.

But, consequently, as a recent Carnegie report noted, "federal support is, for many colleges and universities, not yet a decisive or even a highly influential fact of academic life."

Why, some persons ask, should not the government conduct equally well-financed programs in order to improve those colleges and universities which are not strong—and thus raise the quality of U.S. higher education as a whole?

DR. GEORGE E. HUDOCK, JR.,

50, has been notified of his certification by the American Board of Pathology. He is now recognized as a diplomate of that board.

George is a graduate of Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia. He served his internship and residency in Pathologic Anatomy at the Wilkes-Barre General Hospital and his residency in Clinical Pathology at the Harrisburg Hospital.

He is now director of laboratories at the Bloomsburg and Berwick Hospitals, is an attending staff pathologist at the Veterans Hospital in Wilkes-Barre, is on the staff of the Nanticoke State General Hospital and is consulting pathologist to the Coroner's Offices of both Luzerne and Columbia Counties.

George resides in Berwick with his wife, the former Helen Maria Mesavitz, daughter Judy Ann, and son George, III.

1st LT. MARTIN E. CHERONE, 61,

has entered U. S. Air Force navigation training at James Connally Air Force Base, Texas.

Marty will receive radar and celestial navigation training leading to the award of silver navigator wings upon graduation. The year-long course is conducted by the Air Training Command which trains officers and airmen in the diverse skills required by the nation's aerospace force.

APPOINTED ASSOCIATE DEAN

Robert B. Morris, '59, has been appointed Associate Dean of Students at the State University of New York at Albany. His responsibilities include a summer planning conference; he coordinates the student personnel research group and teaches graduate students as student personnel interns.

Bob received his M.S. degree in Education from Pennsylvania State University in 1962 and his Doctor of Education degree from Penn State in 1964. He has also taken additional graduate work at Dickinson College and Scranton University.

Bob spent four years in the U.S. Navy in the field of personnel and legal work, four years as Assistant to the President here at Wilkes College, and one year as a Research Assistant, Student Affairs Research at Pennsylvania State University.

Bob is married to the former Patsy Reese, '59, and they are the parents of three children, Jeffrey, Pamela and Susan. The Morris' reside at 25 Euclid Avenue, Elmsmere, New York.

EDWARD J. WALLISON, '52, was recently appointed Wilkes College Director of Public Relations. After receiving the A.B. degree in 1952, Ed spent two years in the U. S. Air Force. Following his honorable discharge, he did graduate study at the University of Buffalo and at Bucknell University. Ed received his M.A. degree from Bucknell in 1960.

Prior to assuming his new position at Wilkes, Wallison taught in Williamsville, New York and in the Kingston, Pennsylvania Public Schools. He was most recently affiliated with the announcing and promotion department of radio station WEJL, Scranton.

Ed resides with his wife, the former Gertrude Adamchick, at 61 West Walnut Street, Kingston. They are the parents of four children, Edward, Jr., Joseph, Dianne, and Mark.

But others are more optimistic. Says the CFAE:

"Fifteen years ago nobody could safely have predicted the level of voluntary support of higher education in 1962. Its climb has been spectacular. . . .

"So, on the record, it probably is safe to say that the potential of voluntary support of U.S. higher education has only been scratched. The people have developed a quenchless thirst for higher learning and, equally, the means and the will to support its institutions adequately."

ALUMNI AND ALUMNAE will have a critical role to play in determining whether the projections turn out to have been sound or unrealistic.

Of basic importance, of course, are their own gifts to their alma maters. The American Alumni Council, in its most recent year's compilation, reported that alumni support, as measured from the reports of 927 colleges and universities, had totaled $196.7 million—a new record.

Lest this figure cause alumni and alumnae to engage in unrestrained self-congratulations, however, let them consider these words from one of the country's veteran (and most outspoken) alumni secretaries:

"Of shocking concern is the lack of interest of most of the alumni. . . . The country over, only about one-fifth on the average pay dues to their alumni associations; only one-fourth on the average contribute to their alumni funds. There are, of course, heartwarming instances where participation reaches 70 and 80 per cent, but they are rare. . . ."

Commenting on these remarks, a fund-raising consultant wrote:

"The fact that about three-fourths of college and university alumni do not contribute anything at all to their alma maters seems to be a strong indication that they lack sufficient feeling of responsibility to support these institutions. There was a day when it could be argued that this support was not forthcoming because the common man simply did not have funds to contribute to universities. While this argument is undoubtedly used today, it carries a rather hollow ring in a nation owning nearly two cars for every family and so many pleasure boats that there is hardly space left for them on available water."

Alumni support has an importance even beyond the dollars that it yields to higher education. More than 220 business corporations will match their employees' contributions. And alumni support—particularly the percentage of alumni who make gifts—is frequently used by other prospective donors as a guide to how much they should give.

Most important, alumni and alumnae wear many hats. They are individual citizens, corporate leaders, voters, taxpayers, legislators, union members, church leaders. In every role, they have an effect on college and university destinies. Hence it is alumni and alumnae, more than any other group, who will determine whether the financial health of U.S. higher education will be good or bad in years to come.

What will the verdict be? No reader can escape the responsibility of rendering it.

The report on this and the preceding 15 pages is the product of a cooperative endeavor in which scores of schools, colleges, and universities are taking part. It was prepared under the direction of the group listed below, who form EDITORIAL PROJECTS FOR EDUCATION, a non-profit organization associated with the American Alumni Council. DR. PAUL D. GRIESMER, '53, has been notified by the American College of Obstetrics and Gynecology of his appointment as a lifelong fellow of the organization. The honor was bestowed on Dr. Griesmer at ceremonies in Bal Harbour, Florida. Dr. Griesmer is also a diplomate in his specialty to the American Board of Obstetrics and Gynecology.

A graduate cum laude of Wyoming Seminary, Dr. Griesmer was graduated with honors from the Wharton School of the University of Pennsylvania. After attending the graduate school in economics, accounting and brokerage at Wharton, he accepted a position with Prudential Insurance Company of America from which he resigned to enter medical school.

In 1954, Dr. Griesmer graduated from Jefferson Medical College with the William Potter Memorial Prize for excellence in the clinical branches of medicine, the Albert Einstein Medical Center Award for highest average in the medical course, the alumni prize for the best general average in examinations and the anatomy prize.

He served his internship at General Hospital and attended the graduate school of medicine at University of Pennsylvania. Dr. Griesmer completed three years of residency in obstetrics and gynecology at Misericordia Hospital in Philadelphia. He is a staff member at Nesbitt Memorial Hospital, Kingston, and is a member of the Luzerne County Medical Society and the American Medical Association.

STEPHEN LOVETT, '59, has been named administrative principal of South Bound Brook Public Schools, New Jersey. Steve received his master's degree in school administration from Rutgers University. Prior to his appointment at South Bound Brook, he was acting administrative principal at Far Hills, New Jersey.

Steve is married to the former Dolores Woznicki of Wilkes-Barre. Dolores is a teaching assistant at Rutgers University from where she received a masters degree in elementary supervision.

During the summer, the Lovetts conduct teen-age tours through the United States, Canada, and Mexico. The Lovetts have two daughters, Sharon and Susan.

NAMED BALLET THEATRE DIRECTOR

Miss Jozia Mieszkowska, '61, is director of the Wilkes-Barre Ballet Theatre, and has been appointed artistic director of the Wilkes-Barre Ballet Guild. She also teaches ballet at the Roberson Memorial Center, Binghamton, New York on Mondays and Tuesdays.

Jozia recently returned from Philadelphia where she was guest teacher at the School of the Pennsylvania Ballet Company. She also took classes at the school under Madame Semanova and Frano Jelinic. This past summer, she studied at the Washington School of Ballet, Washington, D. C.

WILLIAM J. DAVIS, '61,

has been selected by Columbia University to participate in their senior medical students' program to spend part of their last year studying and practicing medicine abroad. Of the many students who apply for this opportunity, six are chosen to spend two months each at the Firestone Rubber Company Plantation Hospital in Harbel, Liberia, Africa. Bill left the United States on October 1 for this post in Africa.

At the Firestone Hospital he will serve as intern, responsible for the care and management of a ward of patients, both plantation workers and natives. He will also work in the clinic, deliver babies, assist in surgery, and for a time direct an outpatient medical station far from the central hospital. In addition, Bill will participate in the extensive research being conducted in tropical medicine.

WALTER PHILLIPS, JR., '56, has been named district manager for J. B. Roerig and Company, manufacturer of products for medicine, industry agriculture and the home.

Walt joined Roerig in July 1960 as a medical service representative. His new sales territory covers the state of New Jersey.

Walt and his wife, Lois, live at 34 Beechwood Drive, Reading, Pa., with their son, David.

TRACY NAMED VICE-PRINCIPAL

Paul J. Tracy, '58, has been appointed vice-principal of the Senior High School of Bel Air, Maryland. For the past six years he has been head of the History Department at Havre de Grace High School, Maryland.

A graduate of Pittston High School, Class of 1954, Paul earned his B.S. degree from Wilkes and attended Johns Hopkins University. He received his master's degree in education from Penn State University.

Paul is married to the former Sandra Sue Allen of Erie, Pennsylvania. They are the parents of two sons, Mark Allen and Christopher Sean.

NATALIE VOGT, '64,

is serving with the Peace Corps in Liberia, Africa. She will remain in Africa for two years, where she is teaching in the field of elementary education. She teaches a first-grade class of 40 students ranging from 6 to 12 years of age from 7 a.m. until 12:30 p.m. daily. Her afternoon hours are spent in projects in the area of adult education and community improvements. Natalie also assists the psychiatrist in the mental hospital in Monrovia. Her address is Box 707, Monrovia, Liberia, Africa.

NAMED MINISTER OF MUSIC

William D. Peters, '60, was recently appointed to the position of minister of music at Grace Methodist Church in Kokomo, Indiana. His duties include administering the total music program of six choirs. In addition, he organizes a regular series of organ and choral concerts and presides at the recently installed 47-rank Austin organ.

Bill, who was an honor graduate of Wilkes, recently completed the requirements for a master of music degree in organ and choral conducting at Indiana University where he was a teaching assistant in the organ department.

While at Wilkes, he directed the Male Chorus and was organist and chairmaster at Central Methodist Church. Since then, he has been a faculty member at Jonathan Dayton Regional High School in Springfield, New Jersey and organist and chairmaster at the Community Methodist Church in Kenilworth, New Jersey.

During the past year, he did advanced study in organ, theory and counterpoint, with nationally known concert organist, George Markey, New York City.

among the many...

a member of the surgical staff of Wilkes-Barre General Hospital, has been notified by the American Board of Surgery, Philadelphia, that he successfully passed the American Board examinations in surgery, and is now a diplomate of the American Board of Surgery.

Peter received his M.D. degree from Hahnemann Medical College, Philadelphia. He had two years of active duty with the U. S. Navy and was retired with the rank of lieutenant commander. He served his residency in surgery at Lankenau Hospital, Philadelphia. In July, 1963, he opened offices at 73 West Ross Street, Wilkes-Barre.

He is married to the former Maria Teresa Ricciuti of Philadelphia, and they have a daughter, Teresa Lynn.

NEIL DOUGHERTY, '64.

has been commissioned a second lieutenant in the U. S. Air Force upon graduation from Officer Training School (OTS) at Lackland Air Force Base, Texas.

Lieutenant Dougherty, selected for OTS through competitive examination, is being assigned to an Air Training Command unit at Lowry Air Force Base, Colorado for training as an aerospace munitions officer.

APPOINTED HEAD OF MATH DEPARTMENT

Paul Bankovich, '61, has been appointed chairman of the mathematics department at the Triton Regional High School, Runnemede, New Jersey. He will direct the school's staff of 12 mathematics teachers.

Paul began his professional teaching career in 1961. He was awarded a National Science Foundation scholarship in 1962 to Glassboro State College, Glassboro, New Jersey.

In 1962 and 1963, he also received grants from the Foundation to Rutgers State University, Camden, New Jersey, where he pursued specialized courses in contemporary mathematics for development of expert teaching.

Paul has also received notification that he has been awarded another grant from the Foundation to continue graduate work in the field of mathematics.

Since 1962 he has served during the summer months as waterfront director at Camp Hi-Roc, a boy's camp for members of the Bridgeport, Connecticut Young Men's Christian Association.
