"GREAT THINKING IS HIGH ADVENTURE"

Dr. Eugene S. Farley

You are coming to maturity and are preparing for work and life in a world of unprecedented change and great ideological conflict. None of us can clearly visualize the type of world in which you will be living in fifty, or even twenty-five years, but it is perhaps not presumptuous if I suggest to you some means whereby you can prepare for the unknown future.

We may compare ourselves with Columbus. When he sailed from Spain in 1492 he did not know where he was going, and when he returned he did not know where he had been. It is ever so with explorers. They set out for a preconceived destination, but the point they reach is, frequently, not the point for which they have searched. Their efforts, however, advance the frontiers of man's knowledge, even though they may fail to attain the goal for which they search. By their quest they open "new worlds" that welcome those who follow them.

In 1963 all men of vision and imagination are explorers. In this generation we have left behind the seemingly certain and secure world of the past and have embarked upon the exciting and perilous journey into the unknown.

Two developments have contributed to the tension and turmoil of the contemporary world. They are the spectacular progress of knowledge and the rise of totalitarian ideologies.

Whitehead has said that more scientific progress has been made in the last fifty years than in all preceding centuries combined. Science has pushed the frontiers of knowledge beyond the dreams of our forefathers and has given men new insights into the nature of his physical environment and into the nature of his own self. Technology, the child of science, has placed in man's hands a truly awesome power over the forces of nature.

These breathless advances have given man a new sense of freedom and a new hope, but also, paradoxically, a new sense of insecurity. Ours is an age of great confusion and anxiety. As Einstein has said, "Perfection of means and confusion of goals seem, in my opinion, to characterize our age."

The second development is the rise of modern totalitarianisms. In times of crisis, there have always been demagogues and zealots who were eager to peddle their easy panaceas and utopias among the uninformed, the ignorant and the oppressed. It is, therefore, not surprising that our century has had more than its share of these would-be-saviors. We have in our lifetime witnessed the rise, and fortunately, the fall of two totalitarian ideologies, Fascism and Nazism, but the third, Communism, now completely controls one-third of the globe. Common to all these all-or-nothing ideologies is their massive assault on human freedom; the totalitarians seem to have a very low opinion of the ability of the individual to think and decide for himself, and, in consequence, they rely on force as a means of solving man's problems.

In contrast with these ideologies, we of the free world are dedicated to the way of life based on the recognition of human freedom, the respect of the individual and the belief in his ability to solve his own personal problems as well as to participate constructively in the solution of the larger problems of the society in which he lives.

The next half century may determine which of these competing concepts will control the lives of men. It will depend largely on how the free man meets this double-challenge of rapidly expanding knowledge and extreme ideologies.

In spite of obvious hazards and perils, I would like to share with you the conviction that there are excellent reasons why we can face the future with confidence.

From your studies and your independent thinking you will gain a greater awareness and a deeper understanding of the forces that determine the trends and currents of our time. You will know your heritage of the past, you will comprehend the varied aspirations that now motivate men in all parts of the world. You will know something of the thoughts, conditions, and techniques that change our way of life with ever-increasing rapidity.

As you gain increased understanding of the past and of the present, you will comprehend that the future - whatever it be, good or bad - is an extension and fruition of all that has preceded it. You will gain increased perspective and understanding as you see the present fusing the known past with the unknown future.

We are apt to speak of the Renaissance in the past tense. Actually in the centuries since the Renaissance, man's "awakening" has been continuous and progressive: one discovery has led to other discoveries, and one idea to the recognition of other ideas. With each succeeding century the shackles of ignorance, fear, bigotry, and authority have weakened, and in each century man has gained greater freedom and increased opportunity for self-realization. The scientific and technical revolution, of which we are all a part, is the outgrowth of the freeing of the human mind and of centuries of intellectual inquiry. In politics, in government, in economics, in religion, in thought, and in social custom there has been an increasing measure of freedom, which has led to a greater diversity of thought and practice. It is this diversity that has encouraged scientific inquiry and investigation. Over the centuries investigation and inquiry have taken mankind from the known into the unknown; continued investigation and inquiry are essential to further progress.

Rigid ideologies stand in the way of free inquiry and of progress. They offer only single and supposedly final solutions for all human problems, whereas history shows that many paths must be explored if the best is to be discovered. Some of the modern ideologies seek to return to the past; some wish to break with the past. The Nazis tried to impose and perpetuate the social ideas and values of the past. The Communists try to break with the past; they envisage a world in which economics determines the character of the state and of the people. In contrast with these rigid ideologies the free peoples seek many paths by which to project the benefits of man's past experience into the future. So long as men are free, they will seek varied solutions and will maintain a flexibility that is impossible within a rigid ideology. Free men will seek all truths and facts, whereas the ideologists are compelled to reject any truth and any fact that is incompatible with their system.

To be sure, freedom of thought and action always involves risk. It should be recognized, however, that freedom of inquiry and independence of thought are never the marks of a primitive civilization. They are, on the contrary, the outstanding evidence of an advanced and stable civilization. Only a confident and assured people are able to respect thoughts and ideas that differ from their own. Iron curtains, walls, inquisitions, repressions, and tyrannies do not evidence either strength or confidence. On the contrary, they result from fear of that which is different. Fear is never a mark of strength.

We have already lived in the midst of uncertainty and tension for a quarter century and there now appears little prospect that uncertainty and tension will soon diminish. We, therefore, must cultivate equanimity in the midst of tension and turmoil. This requires understanding of both the promise and the threat inherent in our current situation. If your understanding is genuine, it will enable you to develop the necessary measure of equanimity.

If you believe in the ideals that have captured the imagination of western man for many centuries, you will seek to give them vitality and strength in your daily lives. If man, in his unending search for the best, must explore many paths, assuredly you and I, during our limited span of years, should consider all possibilities that open before us. If your education is to serve you, you must look into the unknown future with open eyes and open minds. You must evaluate critically and constructively the many prospects that will open before you. Failure to do so will inevitably lead into a blind alley, from which there will be no escape.

If you are to participate constructively in the world-wide struggle for the minds of men, you must remember that ideals without acts are empty. Only as we demonstrate the effectiveness of our ideals in our lives and in our institutions do they become dynamic influences that affect world thought. Although we may judge ourselves by our ideals, others judge us by our acts. As one man has wisely remarked, "What you do speaks so loudly that I cannot hear what you say."

You must remember, however, that ideals never operate in a vacuum. They are in constant competition with selfishness, greed, and self-interest. As you observe the everyday affairs of the world, you will see these selfish forces at work. They have never ceased and they never will. They have always been in conflict with decency and with human welfare, and they always will be. It is for this reason that we have laws that protect us from our ruthless neighbors. Because the forces of selfishness are so persistent there will be times when you may lose faith in the power of ideals. At such times it is encouraging to remember that all men of vision and intelligence have had their faith tested at some time in their lives. It is even more encouraging to recognize that western civilization has made progress because of the enduring appeal of those ideals that are its strength. If you look at the condition of mankind throughout the long centuries you will note a slow improvement in man's sense of responsibility to his neighbor. You will find that those cruelties and man's inhumanities to man that were taken for granted 2000 years ago are frowned upon today.

Today we are all concerned by the racial tensions that show themselves in our country and throughout the world. If we are to see the tensions of these times in their true perspective, we must remind ourselves that they are the product of an awakened social conscience; we must recognize that social conscience does not exist without the force of an ideal. Two hundred years ago slavery was taken for granted throughout most of the world, and it was then considered natural that the strong would exploit the weak.

Today we find that social conscience makes it difficult for civilized men to exterminate those who oppose them. You may say that the Nazis and Communists have exterminated millions who have been of the wrong persuasion. This is unfortunately true, but in the not too distant past such practices were taken for granted; today they are condemned as a throw back to barbarism. They can not long be accepted by those who have glimpsed the heights to which men can rise.

The racial problems that beset us in the United States are disturbing. They are not, however, caused by an abandonment of our basic ideals and our national aspirations. They are, on the contrary, the inevitable consequence of conflict between our ideals and our practices. So long as we accepted slavery, we were callous to the rights of all minorities. Once we rejected slavery, our ideals, our consciences, and our national aspirations both restrained and impelled us. So it is that we are now compelled by conscience to recognize the dignity and the rights of all men. It is this same conscience that simultaneously restrains us from acts of intolerance, and impels us to extend the benefits of our ideals to all people.

The people of our nation regret the recent evidence of violence and bigotry and look upon them as a disease that must be cured or checked if our system of government and our economic institutions are to survive. We are embarrassed at home and abroad by acts that deny the rights of citizenship to any American. We know that these acts of intolerance and brutality damage the image of America. We know that these acts are a repudiation of our own ideals. We know that they weaken our cause throughout the world. We hope, however, that the peoples of the under-developed nations will comprehend that the present conflicts in America result from the dynamism of our national ideals — not from their abandonment.

In the midst of rapid change there is danger that we may lose our sense of values, our sense of purpose, and our sense of direction. During any time of revolutionary change, unquestioned and untested values and ideals are readily abandoned by the quick and the pseudo-sophisticated. As someone remarked, "Only those convictions are lasting and valuable which one acquires after overcoming doubts and objections." I beg you to question your values and your ideals as a part of your education. If you do this, you will gain an inner resource that is essential to great achievement and to personal equanimity. You will realize, too, I feel confident, that we need the stabilizing influence of earlier experience to guide us and to prevent us from perpetuating and repeating the follies of earlier generations. It is only from the cumulative experiences of the past that we can develop a sense of equilibrium, of purpose, and of direction.

If we are to be helped by a knowledge of the past we must not only know man's mistakes, we must also know his great achievements, his aspirations, his ideals and his values for they are the dynamic forces of Western civilization. We must be familiar with these forces from the past if we are to weave the best of them into the new civilization that is developing. Among the most potent of these forces are:

1. THE CHRISTIAN CONCEPT OF BROTHERHOOD:

For two thousand years, Christians have given lip service to this ideal. Today the Christian conscience prods us to live in accordance with it.

2. FREEDOM OF THOUGHT AND OF CONSCIENCE:

This is the most important gift of the Renaissance. So long as thinking was curtailed by tradition and authority, man was incapable of improving his condition in this world. The scientific and technical developments of the present have resulted from man's freedom to use his mind.

3. RECOGNITION THAT DIVERSITY IS ESSENTIAL TO PROGRESS:

As we examine the intellectual traditions of the past, we may discover that conformity has been the greatest hindrance to the development of man.

4. THE DISCOVERY THAT UNITY IS POSSIBLE IN THE MIDST OF DIVERSITY:

Where men respect those who differ from them in custom, tradition, creed, color, or language, they are united by a recognition of their common problems and aspirations.

5. THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE SCIENTIFIC METHOD:

Man's desire to question and verify each hypothesis with facts has expanded his frontiers of knowledge and has made possible our modern technology.

6. SELF-GOVERNMENT:

This must be included for our own forebears created a new nation in their quest for self-government. Today, self-government is one of the great aspirations of people throughout the world.

7. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION:

The basic characteristic of man, whatever his race, creed, or color, is his creative intelligence. Without educational opportunity for all, this greatest resource, man's creative intelligence, remains untapped and undeveloped.

These seven forces that I have mentioned relate to the spiritual, the intellectual, and the material aspirations of man. Because they appeal to the creative instincts of man, they are the dynamic power of western civilization. If we lose them, our civilization will join the long procession of earlier civilizations that waned when they lost their motivation to move ahead. No man and no civilization can remain static.

I believe that your acceptance of these creative ideals is essential to your own development and to the contributions that you as educated persons will be called upon to make to your community, your nation, and your world. As educated people you must look toward greater things in the future and you must recognize that constructive thought and action originate in the individual mind. You must look ahead with vision and with confidence. As Homer Smith so well states, "So far as we can know at the present time, man is the most magnificently, self-ordered creature in this expanding cosmos. He is not, however, quite as magnificent as we think he could be. Somehow or other we must find a way to communicate the essence of today's science — to young and old alike; somehow thinking must again be made popular, and great thinking synonymous with high adventure."

Perhaps I should now tell you that I could wish to venture with you in your quest for high adventure and magnificence. Although this is my desire, it is only a desire. You will soon outstrip me, for each generation must move beyond the generation that precedes it. If your years at Wilkes are productive, your thoughts and your understanding will move beyond the generation that assists with your education. Those of us who are your teachers would have it so, for this is our purpose and our desire.

I pray, with all my heart, that you will gain the necessary vision and develop the essential capabilities. Great effort and great self-discipline will be required of you. Satisfaction in constructive work may be your greatest reward.

WILKES COLLEGE
WILKES-BARRIE
PENNSYLVANIA

December, 1963

Dear Fellow Alumnus:

As Co-Chairmen of the 1963 Annual Alumni Campaign and on behalf of Wilkes College, we would like to express our appreciation and sincere thanks to all Wilkes alumni who participated in the recent scholarship campaign.

Most especially, we desire to call to the attention of all alumni the outstanding participation of the Class of 1963 in establishing the Class of 1963 Fund.

The conclusion of the 1963 Alumni Campaign resulted in an increase of alumni participation and financial support of Wilkes College. The 1962 campaign saw 14.7% or 596 alumni participating; total support last year was $9,511.74. In contrast, the 1963 campaign shows 20.9% or 739 alumni participating; total support this year is $14,589.76. This total includes $530.00, the result of twenty-six matching gifts. The 1963 campaign surpassed last year's results with an alumni increase of 6.2% in participation and $5,078.02 in total amount pledged by alumni. This demonstration of increased support makes us confident that even more alumni of Wilkes will participate in next year's campaign.

Once again, on behalf of our College, we extend our heartfelt thanks.

Sincerely,
Elmo Clemente

16th Annual Homecoming

The 16th Annual Homecoming festivities were held on October 25 and 26. Approximately 400-450 alumni participated in some or all of the activities. Under the general chairmanship of Attorney Donald McFadden, '57, Homecoming Weekend "kicked-off" with the Annual Warm-up Party on Friday evening, in the Alexander Room of the Host Motel. Chairman of the Warm-up Party was George Murdock, '60. Faculty members, alumni and guests from the Wilkes-Barre area and from all other alumni chapter areas filled the Alexander Room. Renewing acquaintances, discussing careers, and reminiscing highlighted the social informality of the evening.

Prior to the Warm-up Party, a committee of alumni judges headed by Donald Stein, Attorney Eugene Roth, Nancy Davies, Gwen Gould, and George Murdock completed a review of all Homecoming displays in preparation for the awards presentation the following day.

Hollenback Hall, men's dormitory, won two trophies for the third straight year — one for the best over-all display, the other for the best display of men's dormitories. Weckesser Hall, women's dormitory, won the trophy in their area, and the Education Club captured the award in the campus organization's category.

Homecoming activities on Saturday got off to a fast start with the Wilkes - Hofstra soccer game at 11:00 a.m. Many alumni watched the Wilkes soccer team lose a hard-fought game to the Flying Dutchmen of Hofstra by a 4 - 1 score.

Photographed above is the head table at the class reunions held in the Alexander Room of the Host Motel. Seated left to right: Mrs. Ronald Tremayne; Dr. Francis Michelini, Dean of Academic Affairs, Principal Speaker; Mrs. Michelini; Mrs. Leonard Mulcahy; and, Leonard Mulcahy. Standing: Mrs. David Vann; David Vann; Ronald Tremayne, Master of Ceremonies; Mrs. Russell Williams; Russell Williams; and Anita Janerich.

Several thousand alumni, students and friends of the College witnessed the Wilkes - Drexel football game in the afternoon. Again the Colonels were on the short end of a score, this time 23 - 14. Prior to the game, the student car caravan arrived at the athletic field with the Homecoming Queen and her court. Miss Gail Roberts, social studies major, was crowned Homecoming Queen 1963 by Dr. Francis Michelini, Dean of Academic Affairs. Homecoming Princesses were Miss Lorraine Dyers, a French major, and Miss Barbara Lore, an English major. Gifts were presented to the Queen and the Princesses by the Alumni Association, the Student Government, the Beacon, and by the Sophomore, Junior, and Senior Classes.

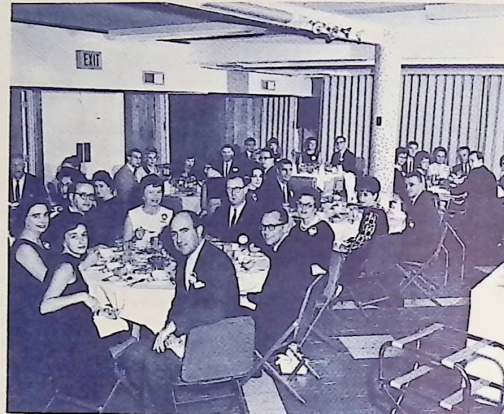

The Alexander Room of the Host Motel was the scene of the class reunion dinners on Saturday evening. Ronald Tremayne, '58, presided as master of ceremonies. Guests of honor Dr. and Mrs. Francis Michelini were seated with the reunion committee members at the head table. Alumni from classes of '43, '48, '53 and '58 heard Dr. Michelini speak of important state and federal legislation which will affect Wilkes, of the immediate and long-range goals of the College, and of the ever-important need for continued and growing alumni support.

Later in the evening, hundreds of alumni gathered in the spacious Dorian Room for the Annual Homecoming Dance, the concluding social event of the weekend.

Election of officers took place during the Saturday festivities. Elected to guide the Alumni Association for the following year were: Leonard Mulcahy, '58, Accountant, Haskins & Sells, Inc., President; Eugene Roth, '57, Attorney, Rosenn, Jenkins and Greenwald law firm, Vice-President; Elmo Clemente, '42, C.P.A., Charles S. Snyder & Co., Treasurer; Nancy Brown Williams, '56, housewife, formerly with Blue Cross and Blue Shield, Secretary.

THE DISAPPEARING IVORY TOWER

by Samuel B. Gould

I. Fifty years ago the American college or university proudly reflected the alleged characteristics of our present-day British "Establishment." It was intended for the few, comparatively speaking, and it kept its activities and its secrets to itself. In fact, it went still further, for once its own initiates had achieved their various degrees, even they were rather summarily ignored except for reunions, traditional gatherings at sports events, and requests for financial assistance.

But a radical change has come about in recent decades. The medieval slits in the ivory tower are being transformed into broad and open expanses of modern picture windows. These invite the curious to look in and they make such peeping easy, not only for the college or university alumnus but for everybody who is interested. They also invite the scholar to look out and see clearly his responsibility for developing the larger community culture. With so much more viewing area and so much less wall, the whole tower is beginning to weaken and will soon disappear. No greater blessing can be vouchsafed to a democratic nation. And no other single technological tool presently in existence can do more to bring about this blessing than can television when it is properly used.

II.

The history of this rather amazing phenomenon, one that within a space of twenty years has become the tyrant of public time and taste, is worth examining.

It was almost inevitable in America that television, the brainchild of scientific and technical workers, should have had its major force devoted to promoting values stemming from technology and materialism. Television was merely following a pattern that radio had previously established. In the 1920's the Federal Communications Commission assigned a large number of AM radio frequencies to educational purposes. One by one, however, either they were not taken up at all or when they were, they soon withered away from lack of financial support and stability. Gradually these frequencies gravitated to commercial interests quick to see the profit possibility, and a great opportunity to give education its place in the sun was lost.

When television came into being, education once more was neither willing nor ready to take on the expense and responsibility of operating VHF channels. With almost no exceptions such channels were taken over by commercial interests, just as had occurred in radio. A huge and powerful industry emerged, dominating virtually all the available channels and pointing its energies toward reaching and holding a great mass audience of all age levels and of all social, economic, and educational conditions.

That the first television activity of consequence in this country was geared to commercialism is significant. Its artistic and educational possibilities were sublimated from the beginning to those essential for advertising and sales. Programs of quality and variety do develop from a policy of commercialism, it is true, but all too many programs of inferior quality or questionable purpose also develop because of this policy.

Today's concentration upon the advertising of products and the development of programs sure to please and rarely intended to tax the mind has led to an emphasis upon values in life that are compatible with a technological and materialistic society. The possession of things in larger quantity and better quality than ever before, already a dominant part of American life before the existence of television, has become even more important. Humane and individualistic values have been dealt with cavalierly. Adventure has been so completely equated with violence and bloodshed that a callousness toward the dignity of individual human life has unwittingly been fostered, with a minimum of countervailing portrayals of gentleness and graciousness. Conformity of many sorts has been encouraged — in dress, habits of eating, drinking, smoking, and the like; in recreational pleasures; in transportation; and even in family relationships. Correspondingly, a strong sense of the importance of security and an almost pathological avoidance of controversy have made their mark upon the values of the viewer.

Just as this medium affects consumer habits and values, so does it also affect and alter standards of taste. If ratings are to be believed, the mass taste of our citizenry tends very largely toward western drama, family situation comedy, detective fiction, popular ballad singers, and comedians. It reflects a willingness to view the same stock plots and stereotype characters week after week together with an equal willingness to forgo any subtleties of dramatization or characterization. It reflects wholesale acceptance of the slick, the smooth, the competent program in preference to the provocative. It reflects a kind

ABOUT THE AUTHOR:

Dr. Samuel B. Gould, President of Educational Broadcasting Corporation, operators of Channel 13 (WNET) in New York, has had a long and distinguished career in education and communications.

Prior to assuming his new position, Dr. Gould was Chancellor of the University of California at Santa Barbara for three years.

Dr. Gould was educated at Bates College and at New York, Oxford, Cambridge and Harvard Universities. He taught English in the senior high school at West Hartford, Connecticut, was head of the Department of Speech of the Brookline, Massachusetts, Schools, organized and directed the Department of Communications at Boston University and served as Assistant to the President of Boston University. In 1954 he was appointed President of Antioch College in Ohio, leaving there in 1959 to accept the position of Chancellor of the University of California, Santa Barbara.

In World War II Dr. Gould served in the United States Navy as a Lieutenant Commander. He is a trustee of Wilberforce University, the Thomas Alva Edison Foundation and the Charles F. Kettering Foundation. Dr. Gould is also Chairman of the Board of the Broadcasting Foundation of America.

Dr. Gould has been widely acclaimed for his forthright ideas on education. Some of his most important speeches have been put together in book form and published under the title KNOWLEDGE IS NOT ENOUGH.

of hypnosis or suspension of critical judgment overcoming the viewer as he sits hour after hour before his set.

Another unmistakable influence of television relates to the disappearing regional differences in our population. Through network broadcasting and syndicated programs the same drama, music, comedy, special events, and even commercial messages are seen from border to border. Urban and rural citizens are subject to the same stimuli. The same catchwords are parroted everywhere from the television screen, and the same star performers are idolized. All this testifies to the power and importance of the word "mass" inherent in the term "mass communications."

It should be noted that as these phenomena of mass taste have developed, a minority of respectable size has also emerged, a minority searching for the occasional program of high purpose and merit with which the total television schedule is dotted. Educational television seeks to provide a broader set of cultural choices for this minority and also undertakes to explore more systematically the instructional possibilities of the medium.

At present there are over eighty educational television stations, with more to come. They vary greatly in size, power, financial stability, and program emphasis. There are also a number of closed circuit operations in school systems and universities. Together these illustrate the three purposes of educational television: to offer instruction through open circuit transmission; thus making the broadcasts available in school or at home; to offer instruction through closed circuit transmission, thus limiting the broadcasts to a single building or group of buildings; to offer to the community cultural programs encompassing discussion of literature, art, or public affairs and performances of music, dance, drama, and so on.

The most important possibility of educational television stems from the tradition of education itself, when properly interpreted. This tradition holds the individual in great respect, recognizing his potentiality for growth and endeavoring to help him toward fulfillment of that potentiality. A sound process of education tries constantly to raise the level of understanding, to encourage students to higher expectations of their individual possibilities, and to protect them from being frozen into a conformist mass. If educational television is to perform its mission well, it must operate according to this self-same tradition, for if it questions the intellectual capacity of its viewers, it ceases to be creative and merely perpetuates mediocrity.

III.

So much for the history and characteristics of the medium. Of what importance is all this to alumni?

The potentialities of television should be of interest to college and university alumni for at least three significant reasons. First, from a purely personal and selfish point of view, alumni should recognize the greatly expanded "refresher" possibilities television can make available. Some institutions of higher education, sensing the need for a deeper sort of relationship between themselves and alumni, are attempting systematically to revive the intellectual interests of their graduates. A goodly number present such a revival opportunity, for example, through the so-called "alumni college," usually organized for a few days at commencement time; a few institutions provide similar opportunities at periodic intervals of the academic year; a very few maintain an ongoing process of alumni education that parallels the regular program at least partially. The newly created Alumni Center at M.I.T. is an outstanding example of this kind of effort.

But it is frequently difficult for one to return to school for a sustained period of time or even for an occasional evening or weekend in order to be updated in one's professional specialty or even in more general areas. And it is even more difficult today for the institution to find rooms and other resources to mount such a program, being so absorbed in the almost overwhelming problem of how to provide education adequately for the increasing number of undergraduate students.

A logical solution would be the offering of telecourses for alumni, the subject matter fields chosen according to the wishes of alumni themselves, the courses presented by the college faculty and made available not only to alumni but to all who have the urge to participate. A systematic, academically worthwhile program could be developed without the red tape and clutter of rules about course credit hours and all the rest. It could be adult or continuing education based upon its finest motivation, namely that of learning for the joy of learning and nothing more. It could encompass literature, the arts, the sciences, and world affairs. And it would require no classrooms, no subway or bus or automobile rides, no large number of faculty, no registration procedures, no examinations.

Second, from such a beginning in adult education by television, spurred by the interest of alumni, could come more confidence on the part of our institutions of higher education in the adaptation of this approach for the undergraduate student also — a more complicated procedure for the latter, perhaps, but nonetheless possible. Results of experiments show conclusively that there are many ways to use television effectively, ways that make possible new techniques of instruction or that help in coping with enormous student bodies and inadequate physical facilities. This is not to advocate the substitution of television for all our conventional methods; it is rather to plead for its intelligent and proper use where it performs a particular service otherwise not practicable. For example, it can bring each student in a class of three hundred as close to the slide under the biology professor's microscope as though he were at the professor's side. Similarly, it can guarantee that the maximum number of students will have the opportunity to benefit from the instruction of the most distinguished and ablest faculty members.

Third, the potentialities of television should make alumni realize more fully their responsibilities as educated men and women for the cultural development of their communities. This powerful instrument can open new vistas to great numbers of people hitherto unreached. Mass education and mass culture can be raised to new levels of understanding and appreciation once there is an awareness of how important and how attainable such levels are. Democratic approaches to culture are not predestined to culminate in mediocrity. Only because there has been a passive attitude or even a snobbish attitude on the part of intellectual leaders has such mediocrity come into being. But with intelligence and perseverance on the part of the community leaders and with the use of all the communicative means at hand, new emphasis can be placed upon the fundamental values by which we live and the gracious attributes of an enlightened society.

College and university alumni must be in the forefront of such a community movement since they are fitted by background for the task. And in performing this task they can and should turn to the exciting and rewarding possibilities of reaching into every home by television. The process of elevating the public taste may be slow but, if properly and assiduously pursued, it will be sure. Television can carry on this process inexpensively and effectively, offering a rich and varied sampling of all aspects of education and culture and strengthening the inner fibre of America.

Here, then, is a new mission for alumni — contemporary, vital, unceasing, and dynamic.

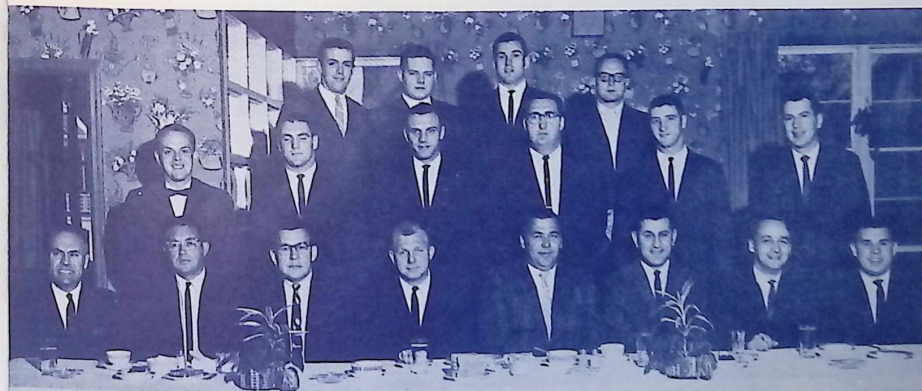

Former Athletes Meet

Alumni have figured prominently in athletic events held recently at our Alma Mater. On September 21, former soccermen engaged the current varsity and proved that age and additional pounds do not hinder the love for the game and the desire to win. When the final whistle sounded that beautiful Fall day in September, our Alumni booters proudly walked (and limped) off the soccer field with a 3-2 victory over the Wilkes varsity.

During the Homecoming Weekend, Dean Ralston and Roland Schmidt, football coach, hosted the First Annual Football Captains' Breakfast at the College Commons. At the "get-together" of former team captains, Coach Schmidt discussed the make-up of the football team and explained the basic offensive and defensive patterns employed. Dean Ralston had his great moments as he reminisced about the early days of football at Wilkes. Among those in attendance were, first row left to right: Dean Ralston, Roland Schmidt, Frank Spudis, Jonah Goobic, Hank Supinski, George Elias, Joe Trosko, and Eddie Davis. Second row: Art Hoover, Pete Winebrake, Al Dobrowalski, Fred Williams, Marv Antinnes, and Ron Fitzgerald. Third row: Don Brominski, Jerry Mohn, Tom Krisulevich, and Bob Yokavonus.
