Debating Society Initiates New Program

by Ruth Partilla

The tradition established by the Wilkes Debating Society since it secured the national trophy at West Point in 1955 has set a definite goal for its present members. With the help of their advisor, David Fendrick, the Society has planned a comprehensive program which will help to develop the College's forensic talent. The purpose in developing this new program, as stated by Ephraim Frankel, president of the Society, is "to think rationally, logically, quickly and humorously — on your feet!'

In order to acquire information for their present topic, Resolved: That the Federal Government Should Establish a National Program of Public Work for the Unemployed, the debaters have contacted the governors and attorney generals of the fifty states. Frankel explained, "An overwhelming amount of general information was received from the governors; the attorney generals likewise contributed information on state laws concerning unemploy-

After unemployment data was accumulated, the debaters' next step was to compile the most recent and accurate statistics for a more thorough preparation for the debating season. This program was initiated by Miss Charlotte Lord, former advisor of the Society, who is presently preparing her doctoral thesis at the University of Pennsylvania.

Robert Werner of the economics department spoke on categories of unemployment. He made the startling observation that some unemployment is due to improper training. As certain jobs increase in complexity, they require a higher intelligence in their workers. The minimum requirements of these jobs leave a certain number of people unemployed.

Complementing this program, the debaters are acquiring a library that can be used to gather reference material. They now posess 22 books including Baker's Specimens of Argumentation, an example of classical argumentation, and Modern Debate, Its Logic and Strategy by Dr. Arthur N. Kruger, a former faculty member. This library will especially aid the novice debaters, who will aso be coached in certain techniques by varsity debaters.

Frankel announced that varsity debaters will begin their debating program at New York University today and tomorrow. The novice debaters, following some preparation in intrasociety debating, will start the season remarked that anyone interested in debating should contact him at Warn-

Heavy voting and large winning pluralities marked the recent election of freshman class officers. Ned Williams defeated three opponents by a landslide to be elected president. His vice-president is France Olexy, who won over four opponents by a large plurality. The race for class secretary was narrowly won by Maureen Flanley, who squeaked past second-place Sheryl Napoleon by sixteen votes. Basil Russin was victorious by a wide margin in the contest for the office of treasurer. Of thirteen students who competed, Jaqui Rubin, Judy Simonson, Matt Fliss, and Joe Kiefer were elected Student Government representatives.

President Williams said, "I would like to make a plea for those who elected us officers to support us." At the class meeting scheduled for December 10, he plans to open for discussion suggestions to earn money for the class treasury. # Science Deals With Facts: Morality With Values

Stanko M. Vujica, Philosophy-Religion Department

In response to the editors' invitation to take part in the Beacon's panel on morality, I shall limit myself entirely to commenting on the idea that "a system of morality can be derived by the use of the scientific method" (which is the way the Beacon has summarized the thesis of Wolfgang Kohler's book The Place of Value in a World of Fact).

This view is but a logical extension of a broader philosophical outlook which is sometimes called scientism and may be defined as the tendency to think of man in merely scientific terms and to apply exclusively scientific solutions to man's problems.

My remarks are not intended to either attack or defend this position, but rather to point out some fairly obvious difficulties and hazards inherent in any attempt to derive morality

To begin with, it seems to me that to talk about a scientific morality is almost a contradiction in terms, as if one were to speak of cheerful sadness. Science deals with facts, morality with values; science deals with what is, morality with what ought to be. Science describes, but does not prescribe. Science is ethically neutral; it tells, for example, that potassium cyanide is an excellent poison, but it says nothing on whether or not you ought to poison yourself - or your mother-in-law. In other words, science and the scientific method have, to a large measure, given us the means for whatever our ends happen to be, but they can say nothing about what ends we ought to pursue.

Should we cultivate the spirit of independence and rugged individualism, as we were urged to do in the recent political campaign, or should we develop the attitudes of cooperation and compassionate concern for our fellow man? Should we strive dents support their directors without for the Nietzschean ideal of a "master-morality" by encouraging the strong and the fit, or should we strive for a society which protects the weak and the unfit? Should we condition our youngsters so that they would be incapable of feeling any compunction about herding into gas chambers men, women, and children of another race? Should we inculcate into our young people the was a credit to them and to their ideal of a Komsomol youth who does not hesitate to denounce College. to the police his own father and mother for their "reactionary" behavior? Alas, on all these questions science and the scientific method are silent, and the silence, as the phrase goes, is deafening.

The German rocket scientists worked first for Hitler and his ideal of a great society; later, following their capture, they worked with equal abandon for Stalin's dictatorship and for our own democracy. Is there any reason to assume that behavioral scientists would not serve the purpose of whatever individual or group happens to have the power?

Society must guard against an ever-present danger that some scientists will put loyalty to their profession above all other other loyalities. The temptation to advance one's own science at whatever cost is very great. If this sounds too pessimistic, proximately ten years. just remember again that German physicians performed experiments with inmates of concentration camps — the kind of which we would hesitate to perform with animals.

Add to the above the hazard arising from the reformer's zeal. A reformer's utter absorption in and fascination with his beatific vision of a faultless world makes him singularly insensitive to the evilness of the means. There is no more potentially dangerous individual than a fellow with a savior-complex in his head and a blue-print of a utopia in his pocket. For, as a Chinese sage said more than two thousand years ago, when such a person "acts and finds no response, he rolls up his sleeves to force it on others.'

Final Point

This leads to my final point. The experience with the experiments to achieve a perfect human community on a scientific basis has been far from reassuring. The Marxists take great pride in saying that their system is scientific. In a certain perverse sense scientific it assuredly is. The Communists believe that they have the formula of what the good society ought to be, and after gaining power, characteristically by force, not by persuasion, they proceed with the laboratory testing of its validity and do it with an impersonal, scientific cold-bloodedness, with all value judgments such as right or wrong, and all senti-ments, all sentimentalities left out. If a few million human beings must be liquidated, because they oppose the experiment, it is too bad. "One cannot make omelets without breaking eggs," was a favorite proverb of Stalin. Those who survive, the human guinea pigs in this experiment in human engineering, must be kept under complete control, which, after all, is another requirement of the scientific method. The secret police and the government propagandists, versed in the techniques of conditioning and brainwashing, are assigned the task of seeing to it that the conditions of a controlled experiment are maintained until men become automatically happy and incapable of anti-social behavior.

In his novel Darkness at Noon, Arthur Koestler writes of the hardened young Communist Ivanov giving answer to an older comrade who had begun to feel scruples of conscience about what they were doing:

Every year several million people are killed quite pointlessly by epidemics and other natural catastrophes. And we shrink from sacrificing a few hundred thousand

Letters to the Editor

Who Is John Galt?

Dear Editor:

It was an interesting discovery for me to pick up last week's Beacon and find that I had composed "Why Not Socialism" in a state of absolute hysteria. It seems to me, however, that the author of "Why Not Camelot" hurled a great many insults without making a strong criticism of what was set forth in my letter. I would like to expand upon some of the points which the author questioned as having any validity.

I stated, "Socialism has been a failure wherever it has been tried." Miss Utopia contends that a more ridiculous statement could not have been formulated. At first glance one might accept such a criticism, but let's you and I look more closely at this one point. The largest single obstacle to the success of the planned economy has been the lack of foresight of a few planners in planning for a large country. A perfect case in point is Sweden, which has a successful socialistic economy. But her very success has been due to the fact that she is able, as a small country, to concentrate on certain major industries and import the necessities she does not produce. Size is of vital importance when discussing the over-all planning of the economy. The larger the country the more difficult it seems to have been to anticipate and plan for the diverse needs of the people who are spread across many temperate and time zones.

Mismanagement Problem

Going from one extreme to the other, we look at Russia and Red China. Both are suffering from mismanagement of their economies. Illustrative of the problems in their entire systems are their farm problems. Today the Russian farmer produces enough food and fibers for himself and four others, while the "big bad capitalistic American farmer" produces enough food and fibers for himself and 28 others. The agrarian industry is the oldest industry in any country and is the backbone of any successful economy. A highly successful farm program frees manpower to work in other industries, thus boosting the Gross National Product. Just two weeks ago the new Russian leadership of Kosygin and Brezhnev announced that efforts would be made for the capitalistic production of consumer goods to try to raise total output. But, ah! Was it not Marx who said that socialism would far outproduce any capitalistic system, and was it not Krushchev who said of the capitalists, bury you!"?

Naturally, as Miss Utopia suggests, the proof of the pudding of our high standard of living is not in that we have two cars per family. The basic point that the example served was to point out that not only can the Average American afford to travel in a car (it might be interesting to point out that, while in England, I witnessed 10,000 Southampton dockyard workers leave work in the pouring rain on foot and on bicycle), but that the Average American has been afforded a material well-being higher than anything in the history of man, including not only consumer goods, but medical facilities and the like as well. I do not intend to hide the squalor and unemployment that exists as a result of our semi-capitalistic system. It exists, and to a larger degree than most people like to admit. But we have come a long way since The Jungle about which Upton Sinclair wrote, and this progress has not been due to government intervention alone. It would take a person blind to society to say that we are the only system suffering from this malady of technical unemployment; Russia in particular is suffering to a greater degree from this same problem.

Miss Utopia has indicated in her letter that "pure capitalism is not the

for the most promising experiment in history? Not to mention the legions of those who die of undernourishment and tuberculosis in coal and quick-silver mines, rice fields and cotton plantations. No one takes any notion of them; nobody asks why and what for; but if we shoot a few thousand objectively harmful people, the humanitarians all over the world foam at the mouth. Yes, we liquidated the parasitic part of the peasantry and let it die of starvation. It was a surgical operation that had to be done once and for all; but in the good old days before the revolution just as many died in any dry year - only senselessly and pointlessly.'

Before we embark upon our own experiments in large-scale human engineering, we must find a way "by the use of the scientific method" to show to comrade Ivanov that it is monstrously wrong to "liquidate" one's fellow man just because they happen to have different ideas about the "most promising experiment in history.'

And, my attentive reader, this is no different than the Utopia suggested by last week's author. If she were to take the profit incentive out of the capitalistic system, she would have very few people making the effort to keep the society going. This is just

Travis-Bey, Edwards and Eurich Honored

As the clouds of dust are settling over the many gridirons across the country, I am ready to select my final "Top Ten" and pass on the "roses" to those players who have earned them.

The last two weeks have produced the major upsets of the year. Nebraska's 17-game winning streak was stopped by Oklahoma, and Army broke the spell Navy held over them. The biggest upset of the year occurred as the bubble over Notre Dame burst when an inspired Southern California came from behind to edge the "Fighting Irish." Despite the loss, I feel Notre Dame still has the best team in the country. They play the toughest schedule of any team in the nation. They have no breather games, as many of the major college teams do. Alabama and Arkansas have good teams, but their schedules are somewhat softer than that of Notre Dame.

Here is the final "Top Ten":

- 1. Notre Dame
- Alabama
- Arkansas Texas
- 5. Michigan
- 6. Nebraska Oregon St.
- 8. Ohio St. 9. Princeton

Finding Tulsa and Princeton in the "Top Ten" may be surprising to some, but not if one takes a look at the records. Tulsa has Jerry Rhome, who ning action as the Colonels blocking residence in Phoenixville, Pa. Princeton was undefeated, has one of the finest coaches in the country, and has the best fullback around in Cosmo Iacavazzi.

As the season ended, my record was 149 right and 54 wrong or a .733 percentage, Since beginning my predictions last season, I have compiled an over-all record of 238 right and 87 wrong for a .732 percentage.

I pick Ara Parseghian as Coach of the Year for his bringing the Irish of Notre Dame back into prominence as a major football power. He took Notre Dame from a 2-8 record to a 9-1 record and turned unknown players into great stars. With Ara at the helm, the Irish will be experiencing greatness

Other top linemen were Dick Butkus, Tommy Nobis, Glen Ressler, Steve DeLong, Archie Sutton and Ronnie Caveness.

Back of the year was a toss-up between Jerry Rhome and John Huarte, but Rhome's individual record was the deciding factor. Rhome led Tulsa from shambles to a great season and a bowl bid. Other top backs include Joe Namath, Cosmo Iacavazzi, Craig Morton, Tucker Fredrickson and Galen Sayers.

Comeback of the year goes to John Huarte of Notre Dame. Huarte played only 45 minutes last year, had a shoulder injury in spring practice and nearly had to have an operation. Huarte won the Heisman Trophy and was the main cog in the potent Irish offensive attack with his fine passing and daring running.
